FEDERATION WARS

In our February 1994 issue, we tried to answer the question that always provokes debate among wrestling fans: "WWF vs. WCW—Which Is Better?" Our analysis brought us to the conclusion that the WWF was better—that federation won in five of seven categories. This drew a mixed response from our readers.

"Your story underestimated the importance of strong champions," wrote Paul Alferd of Montclair, New Jersey. "You only gave WCW the edge in that and supercards. But I don't think the WWF's edge in roster depth means much. Big Van Vader, Dustin Rhodes, and Lord Steven Regal could beat almost anyone in the WWF."

"How could you rate WCW's supercards ahead of the WWF's?" wondered Nora Romain of Reno, Nevada. "WrestleMania IX and SummerSlam were two of the best shows I saw all year. Nothing WCW did matched those!"

"If there's any area where WCW has an edge, it's tag teams," wrote Kevin DeNario of Independence, Missouri. "The Quebecers are a joke and the Steiners are very overrated. Give me the Nastys or Bagwell and Scorpio any day."

When together, Steve Austin and Brian Pillman were WCW's premier tag team, states reader Noel Tovar. Now they've separated, and Austin has profited little from being on his own.

STEVE WILL BE CRYIN'

I was watching WCW Worldwide recently and I saw Steve Austin turn against Brian Pillman. What the heck is going through Steve's mind? He and "Flyin' Brian" were definitely the best tag team in WCW. Although they weren't the most technically skilled or the most powerful, the way they worked together was awesome. They were the best at fast movement, quick thinking, and rulebreaking. No one could beat them at that, including current WCW World tag team champions The Nasty Boys.

Pillman helped Austin when he was nothing, and Austin is still nothing as a singles competitor. What does Steve do in return? He turns his back on him. I guarantee two things: Austin will not win the U.S. title and Pillman will whip Austin when he gets the chance.

NOEL TOVAR
Bedford, TX

MONEY, MONEY, MONEY

I would like to comment on the "PWI 500" (December 1993). Ted DiBiase was rated number 30. The paragraph below him stated that he and Ted DiBiase and Irwin R. Schyster were anything but cowardly champions, according to reader John Michael Pluto, who notes all the good teams they beat.

Irwin R. Schyster were cowardly champions. I am getting sick and tired of this blatant Money Inc. bashing. Money Inc. was the greatest tag team ever in pro wrestling.

If you don't believe me, ask the teams they defeated. Ask the Nasty Boys, Megamaniacs, Beverly Brothers, Steiners, Natural Disasters, Legion of Doom, Smokin' Gunns, and the Bushwhackers. The list goes on and on. How many so-called "cowards" could pin Road Warrior Hawk or put Earthquake to sleep? None! I rest my case.

JOHN MICHAEL PLUTO
Gilbertsville, PA

WILDMAN SABU

In the past few months I've had the pleasure of attending several ECW cards in Philadelphia. Let me tell anyone who considers ECW champ Sabu's aerial talents and recklessness exaggerated that they are badly mistaken. This guy can really fly. It doesn't surprise me one bit that he's been able to hold both the ECW heavyweight and ECW TV title at the same time. He's that good. He combines the aerial skills of a Jimmy Snuka with the brutality of a Bruiser Brody and the bloodlust of a Kevin Sullivan. Maybe I'm going a bit too far and I understand he'll need a few years to hone his skills, but when that happens, look out. This guy has incredible potential.

BRAD WALTER
Phoenixville, PA

Sabu has an avid fan in "PWI Hotline" caller reader Brad Walter, who's watched him many times on ECW cards, and calls him a superb aerialist with plenty of brutality and bloodlust.

DOES HE BELONG?

How could you idiots forget to include me in the "PWI 500"? There's no way you could look past my talent. I am undefeated in independent action and I bust my butt in the WWF against the likes of Doink the Clown, Razor Ramon, and Tatanka, not to mention giving them tough matches. Next time I expect to see my name in the rankings, preferably in the top 100. If it's not, I'll personally prove to you that I belong there!

TONY DeVITO
New York

RAW RAVES

If there were a Program of the Year Award, it would definitely go to WWF Monday Night Raw. In the last few months, we've seen The Kid come out of nowhere to become a star in the federation, Crush totally destroy Randy Savage, Razor Ramon win the Intercontinental title in impressive fashion, and lots more. There's no doubt in my mind that Raw is the best wrestling on television today.

Rick and Scott Steiner lost their WWF World tag team belts to The Quebecers last September on WWF Monday Night Raw. Reader Nathan T. Bellinger enjoys viewing the program for its many highlights and upsets.

MISSY'S NO MANAGER

When I bought and read the January 1994 issue of PWI, I was absolutely disgusted to find out that Missy Hyatt is once again a manager. But why would her pairing with The Nasty Boys be so difficult to understand? Missy Hyatt is as nasty and disgusting as

10 YEARS AGO IN PWI

The cover of the April 1984 featured Ric Flair in a GQ-like pose, taken just days after he regained the NWA World title from Harley Race in a grueling steel cage battle at the very first Starrcade. 15,447 at the Greensboro (North Carolina) Coliseum witnessed the first NWA World title change within a cage, while another 30,000 watched in 10 closed-circuit TV locations. "A Second Chance At Greatness," the cover headline proclaimed, and history proved that Flair took advantage of it.

The centerfold, one of the most popular of the year, was a glorious portrait of Rocky Johnson, who shared the WWF World tag team title with Tony Atlas. Johnson, a former boxer, brilliantly combined his athleticism with speed and brute power. He still competes from time to time in Florida and Canada.

Elsewhere in the magazine: The forecast for the newly formed team of Hulk and Andre the Giant was disaster ... Mike Davis paid the price for saying no to J.J. Dillon's managerial offer ... Former partners Tommy Rich and Ted DiBiase raged a hellacious war.

RINGSIDE

With Bill Apter

TAKE YOUR PICK: Who's the WWF Intercontinental champion? Is it Shawn Michaels, who held the belt for most of 1993, but was suspended in September by federation officials for reasons not entirely clear? Or is it Razor Ramon, who soon filled the vacancy by surviving a battle royal and then defeating the other finalist, Rick Martel, for the title?

Whatever your viewpoint, it's causing a load of controversy in the WWF.

Michaels has been proclaiming himself as the "undisputed Intercontinental champ" since being reinstated in the federation. He's looked as strong as ever in most of his matches (though he was dominated by Randy Savage when the WWF toured Great Britain), and has even resorted to mocking Ramon by using the "Razor's edge" finisher in some of his bouts. Ramon and Michaels have also interfered in each other's matches.

Down the road, this has to lead to a title bout. At WrestleMania X, perhaps?

Fans of women's wrestling are saluting the WWF's decision to revive the women's title that it abandoned in 1990. At press time, the federation was holding a tournament to determine a champion, and most observers considered the newly signed Mausa Miceli the favorite. No matter what happens, people are eagerly awaiting matches

Shawn Michaels still calls himself "the undisputed Intercontinental champion," but it's Razor Ramon who captured the title after Michaels was stripped of the belt last September. This may soon be settled in the ring.

A little Doink'll do ya: When the WWF prohibited Doink the Clown from having lookalike Doinks, Doink found a way to skirt the ruling: He now employs a midget version of himself, Dink. You can bet that he'll cause a little bit of trouble.

between the kick-boxing Miceli and crazed Luna Vachon. They should be wars!

Speaking of Luna, she and Bam Bam Bigelow are in for a little more than they expect when Bigelow tangles with Doink the Clown. And we literally mean a little more. Although WWF President Jack Tunney has disallowed the use of multiple Doinks (his clones now wrestle in various independent federations), the jester recently received a midget version of himself from Santa Claus.

This diminutive Doink, named Dink, is at ringside for every match, and will certainly try to cut Vachon and Bigelow down to size.

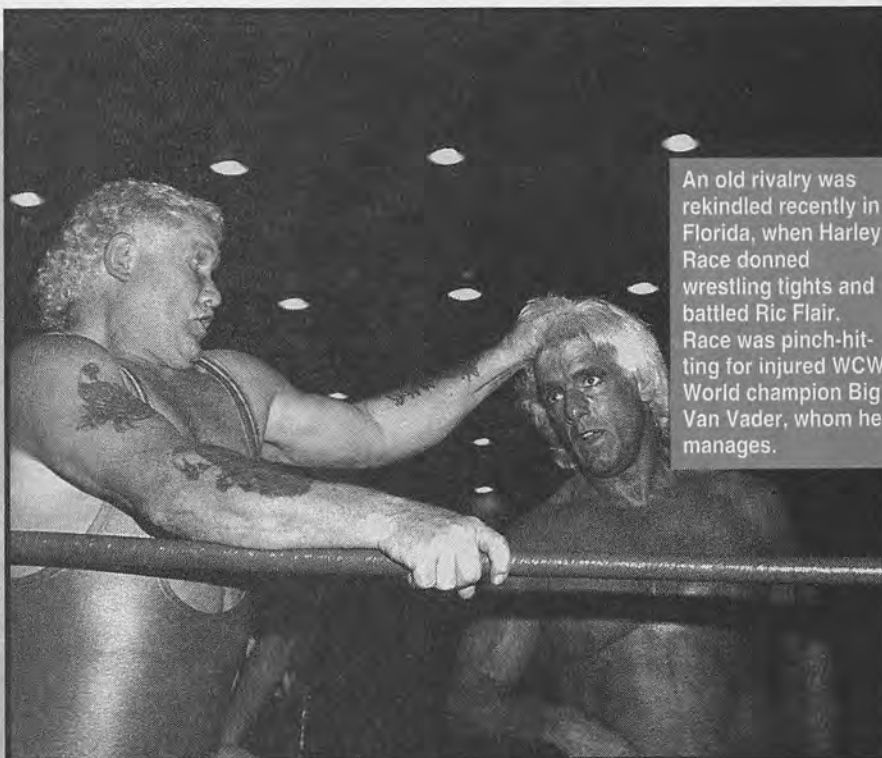

We can't ignore the news coming out of New York, where WWF head Vince McMahon has been indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of possessing and conspiring to distribute anabolic steroids. McMahon professes his innocence, and under our legal system he is innocent until proven guilty. The trial is scheduled to begin in May.

At stake is not only the federation's reputation, but its real estate. Titan Sports, the WWF's corporate parent, is also a defendant. If the government can prove the alleged felonies took place at Titan Tower in Stamford, Connecticut, the $9-million complex could be seized as part of a conviction.

WCW fans in Florida must have felt 10 years younger not long ago, when they saw Harley Race wrestle—that's right, wrestle!—longtime foe Ric Flair. Race was filling in for his injured World champion, Big Van Vader. Flair won from the desk of...

Stuart M. Saks

Some things cannot be vanquished. Things like a great explorer's spirit, a lonely man's pain. Things like a lover's desire, a mother's devotion to her child.

Things like the heart and soul of professional wrestling.

For those of us who have come down on the sport in recent times, and I include myself among them, we spoke too soon. Yes, these are difficult times in wrestling, and for the men within it. But away from the Vincent McMahon indictment and the scandals that have plagued some of the great wrestlers of these times, the essence of the wrestling—its unbreakable fiber of intensity, athleticism, and excitement—beats on.

Last month I wrote in this space lamenting the woes that have befallen McMahon, Jerry Lawler, and Sid Vicious and Arn Anderson. I said that I reported bad wrestling news out of professional duty, with a bad taste in my mouth.

I still lament the individual cases and the bad taste is still there. But if even in my remotest subconscious I allowed myself to believe that these troubles could bring down the beauty and power of wrestling, I was wrong. Very wrong.

Not long after the McMahon indictment, I attended a live taping of WWF Monday Night Raw in Poughkeepsie, New York. As soon as I stepped into the arena, the energy of the place swept through me. The fans were alive, the prematch buzz of anticipation moving palpably through the air.

As I picked my way through the crowded aisles and took my seat, I thought of nothing but the competition that awaited me.

THE MOST POPULAR WRESTLING YOU NEVER HEARD OF

Here are a few trivia questions:

- Is Cien Caras a fan favorite or a rulebreaker?
- What are the names of the three wrestlers who comprise Los Exoticos?
- Which of the following wrestlers wear masks: Volador, Octagon, The Blue Panther, or Fuerza Guerrera?
- What makes Mascarita Sagrada different from most wrestlers?

If you answered all of the above correctly (or any of the above correctly, for that matter)—without guessing!—then you're ahead of most PRO WRESTLING ILLUSTRATED readers, and most wrestling fans in general. Because that means you have some knowledge of AAA, the Mexico-based federation that didn't wait for the passing of NAFTA before sending its product across the border into California and enjoying huge success.

As of press time, AAA (which stands for Asestencis Asesoria y Administracion) has run a total of five cards in the United States, three in late-August and two in November. They've averaged approximately 9,000 fans at each card, including dates at the Los Angeles Sports Arena on August 28 and November 12 that drew 16,700 and 11,600 fans, respectively.

This is clearly more than a strong regional promotion. This promotion, already incredibly popular in Mexico, is testing the waters in the United States and, quite obviously, finding them friendly.

What makes AAA so popular at a time when arena crowds exceeding just a few thousand are rare in the U.S., even for WWF and WCW cards?

Perhaps it's the unique mystique of the acrobatic masked wrestler, a tradition most fans in the U.S. associate with the excellence of Mil Mascaras. It continues in AAA today with such stars as Psicosis, Rey Misterio Jr., and El Hijo del Santo (who, like Mascaras, is a major film star in Mexico).

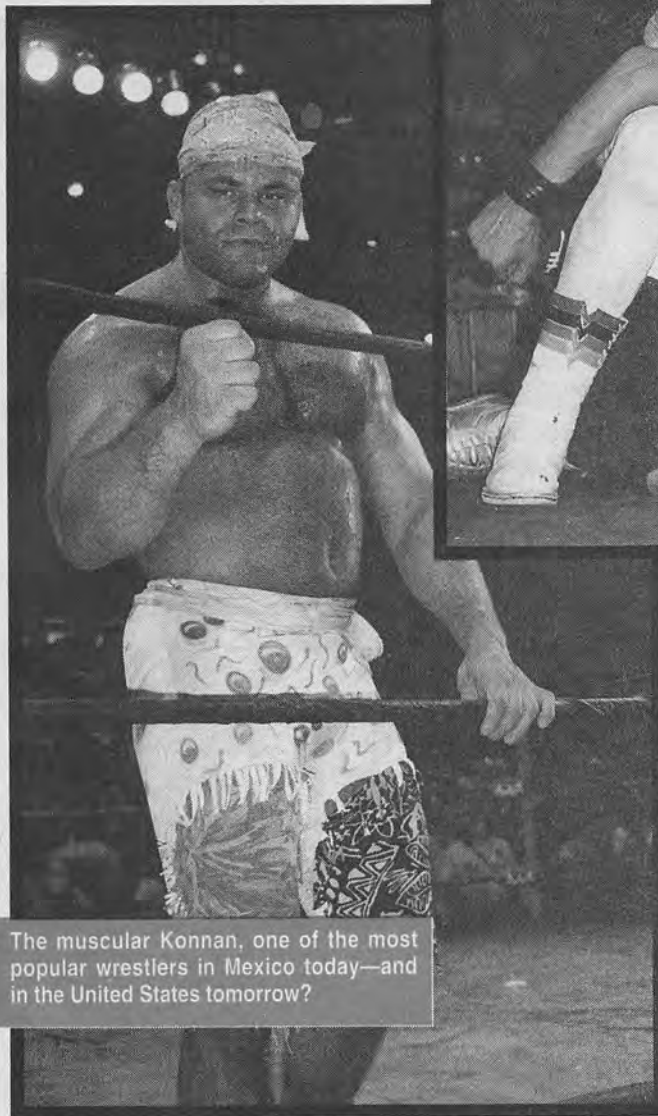

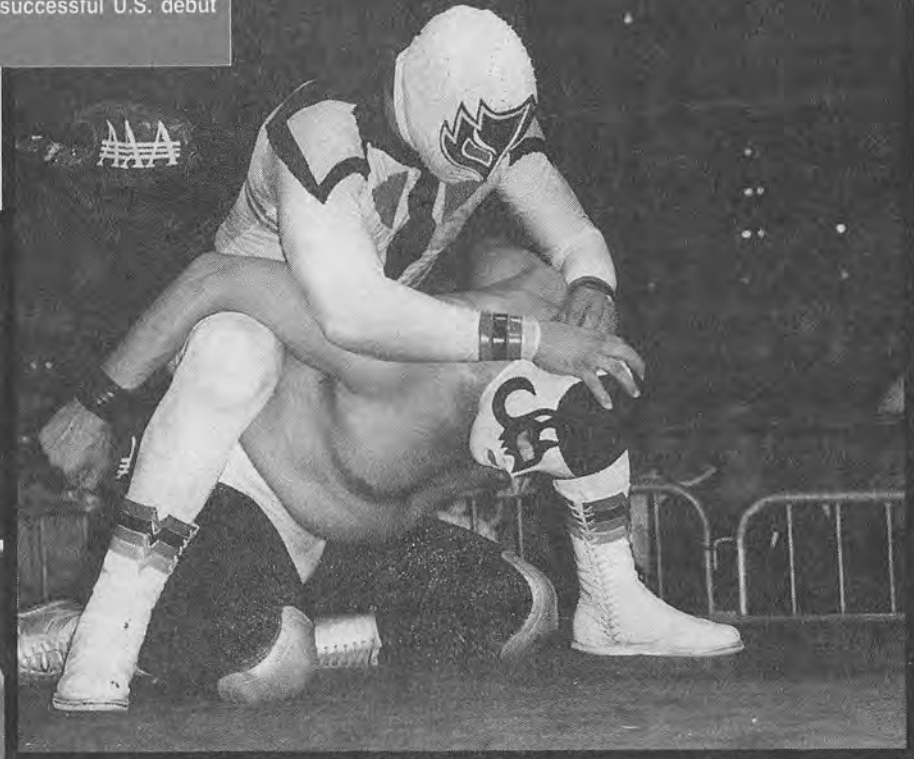

Perhaps it's the phenomenal action and incredible risk-taking that's displayed on most AAA cards. Think, for example, of the kinds of risks taken by The Kid, Cactus Jack, and Sabu. Now, Fuerza Guerrera, one of the AAA promotion's more notorious masked rulebreakers, uses Octagon's mask to literally tie him up in the ropes.

Mascara Sagrada tries to unmask Universal Dos Mil during a six-man contest in San Jose, California, last August. The card drew a crowd of 4,500, part of an enormously successful U.S. debut for the Mexico-based promotion.

The muscular Konnan, one of the most popular wrestlers in Mexico today—and in the United States tomorrow?

instead of seeing them as one wrestler on a card, imagine an entire card of wrestlers taking those kinds of risks! Have you ever seen Brian Pillman or Jushin Liger attack a wrestler by diving through the ropes from the ring to the arena floor? That's called a tope in Mexico, and it's as common as the dropkick is here in the U.S.

Perhaps it's the slight twist on traditional wrestling rules that's utilized by AAA. Many of the bouts are best-of-three-falls, six-man bouts where each three-man team has a member designated as the captain. To win a fall, one team must either pin or force a submission to either the captain or both of the other two members of the team (in effect, pinning the captain counts for two points, while pinning another team member counts for one point).

Or perhaps the AAA's remarkable success comes simply because it's preaching to the converted. After all, there's a large Mexican population in Southern California that's already attuned to the federation's goings-on by virtue of the local AAA television programs. The question remains to be answered: Can AAA succeed outside of Southern California?

We may soon know the answer. The promotion is slated to run cards in New York City and Chicago in February, in addition to returning to California in March. Should the success of AAA prove to be more than a West Coast phenomenon, then everyone in the U.S., from WWF and WCW to Smoky Mountain and USWA and ECW, will have to sit up and take notice.

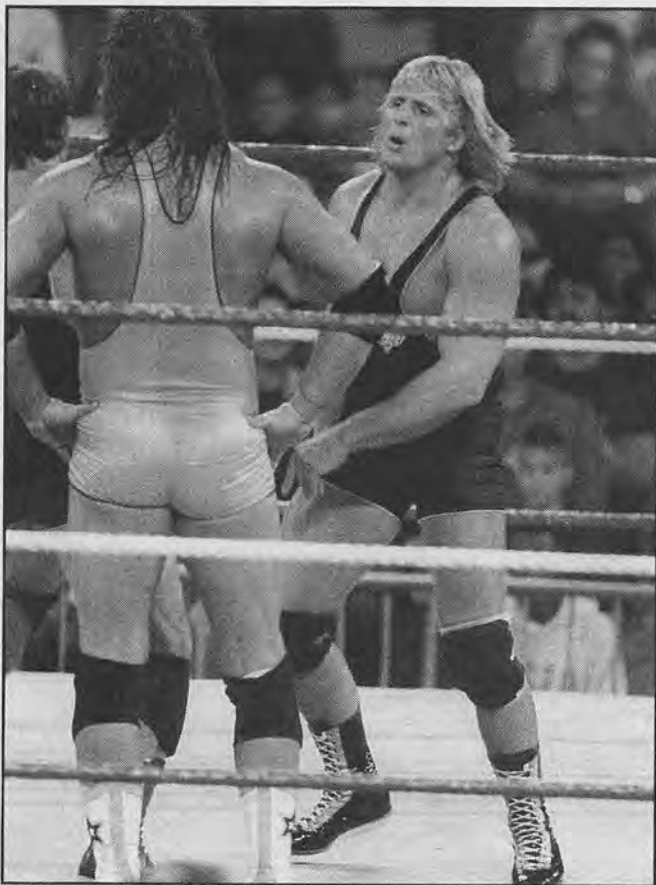

(By the way, the answers to the questions posed at the beginning of the column are: Rulebreaker [the most hated wrestler on the AAA roster, in fact]; Rudy Reyna, May Flowers, and Baby Sharon; all of them; he's a midget.) □

THE HART BROTHERS can now be called wrestling's First Family. But, thanks to little brother Owen, there's a lot of dissension in that family, so they may not hold that lofty distinction for very long.

At the Survivor Series on Thanksgiving Eve, Owen decided his brothers had not acted in his best interests. After Shawn Michaels pinned him, he looked over to see brothers Keith and Bruce tending to brother Bret, whom Owen had accidentally knocked off the apron and into the metal ring barrier.

That ticked off Owen, who returned to the dressing room. Bret recovered and the Harts went on to win the match. When Owen returned, he shoved Bret to the mat rather than join in the celebration.

There is a chance that by the time you read this all will be well with the Hart brothers. Owen will have apologized, and Bret will be in the midst of another serious run at the WWF World title. However, Owen's

Owen Hart has long been widely acknowledged as a fine wrestler, but he's always competed under big brother Bret's long shadow, and it's beginning to irritate him.

flash of anger revealed the deep-seated rivalry between them. The rivalry is natural among brothers, but it nearly insures that neither will achieve the greatness of which he is capable.

win or lose draw

BY ANDY RODRIGUEZ

Talk to those who grew up with Bret and Owen and who know them well now, and they will tell you how important it is for the brothers always to be trying to top each other.

"Looking at the family overall, you see a lot of accomplishments, from grade school on up," said one longtime family acquaintance. "But it isn't so much because they were supporting each other, it was because they were opposing each other. Outwardly they celebrated each other's successes, but privately they were plotting against each other. Not in a sinister way, but there was a tension there. You don't have to take my word for it; a lot of other people will tell you the same thing."

A similar tale indeed was told by several Hart friends and acquaintances. To a man and woman, they love and respect the family. They also insist the Harts were super-intense rivals who sought advantages over one another.

Bruce Hart's view: What's wrong with that?

"You've admitted that this rivalry is natural among brothers," he said. "We were certainly competing against one another. In that way we opposed each other, but if one of my brothers did something well, I celebrated it gladly. There was absolutely no jealousy. Maybe a little bit, but that was just immaturity. We outgrew it."

If Owen did outgrow it, it didn't show at Survivor Series. He lashed out at his brothers, especially ex-World champion Bret. He claimed he was always being overlooked in favor of his older brothers.

Overlooked by whom? Not the fans. Owen had become the second most popular member of the family

A CHANGE FOR THE BETTER?

If you are a fan of wrestling, you have to be rooting for the federal government to throw the book at Vince McMahon.

The WWF head, who is facing a possible prison sentence and $1-million in fines for allegedly distributing steroids to his wrestlers, is undoubtedly the most influential player in the sport. Whether you find today's wrestling appealing or revolting, you have to credit Vince McMahon for singlehandedly shaping what it has become.

It was McMahon who took wrestling from late-night television filler material to a booming pay-per-view extravaganza. It was McMahon who created the concept of the wrestler as a larger-than-life superhero. It was McMahon who turned wrestling into a marketing tool more powerful than any home shopping network.

And, as we await the outcome of his case, we must remember that it was McMahon who is responsible for the sport's current decline.

Twice a month, I have to develop and write a column for this family of magazines. I used to look forward to using this space to offer my opinions to the reader. This year, writing many of my columns has become a chore not unlike scrubbing the underside of my toilet.

Why? Because today's brand of wrestling is losing an edge that it has enjoyed for years. Along with the charges currently facing McMahon, there should be an additional indictment against him for undermining the popularity of the sport.

As it stands today, wrestling is rife with overpublicized athletes who aren't nearly as good as they are touted to be. Lex Luger became a patriot and took a bus tour across the United States, but he hasn't won a title. Yet he remains the focal point of the WWF's relentless hype machine. The biggest impact Sid Vicious has made on WCW was an attack upon Arn Anderson in a hotel room in London.

Many matches are either thoroughly one-sided or thoroughly unappealing. Yokozuna vs. P.J. Walker? I'd rather see Yoko Ono wrestle P.J. Walker. At least it would be more competitive.

You think that's bad? This was an actual WCW card in Kennesaw, Georgia, on October 26: Brian Anderson vs. The Gambler; Terry Taylor vs. The Ace; Michael Hayes vs. Bobby Walker; The Equalizer vs. Mike Winner; Thunder & Lightning vs. Buddy Lee Parker & Big Bad John; and, in the main event, Tex Slazenger & Shanghai Pierce vs. Tom Zenk & Jim Steele. I don't care if admission was free. There isn't enough money in print to get me to attend that card.

When a match does appear to have promise, its finish usually leaves a film in one's mouth. There was a true sense of anticipation for the Bret Hart-Yokozuna bout at WrestleMania IX. It ended in ridiculous fashion, with the referee losing total control and Hulk Hogan emerging from the muck wearing the championship belt.

Vince McMahon should rightly get most of the credit for wrestling's rise during the 1980s. He also deserves much of the blame for the sport's recent woes.

Most sports have an annual crop of newcomers who add freshness and excitement, preventing the product from becoming stale. Usually, wrestling is no exception. This year, baseball had Mike Piazza, football had Terry Kirby, and basketball had Chris Webber. In wrestling, nearly all of the "newcomers" are veterans who have been out of the loop for a while. The most exciting "rookie" this year was The Kid, who has actually been competing since the late-1980s.

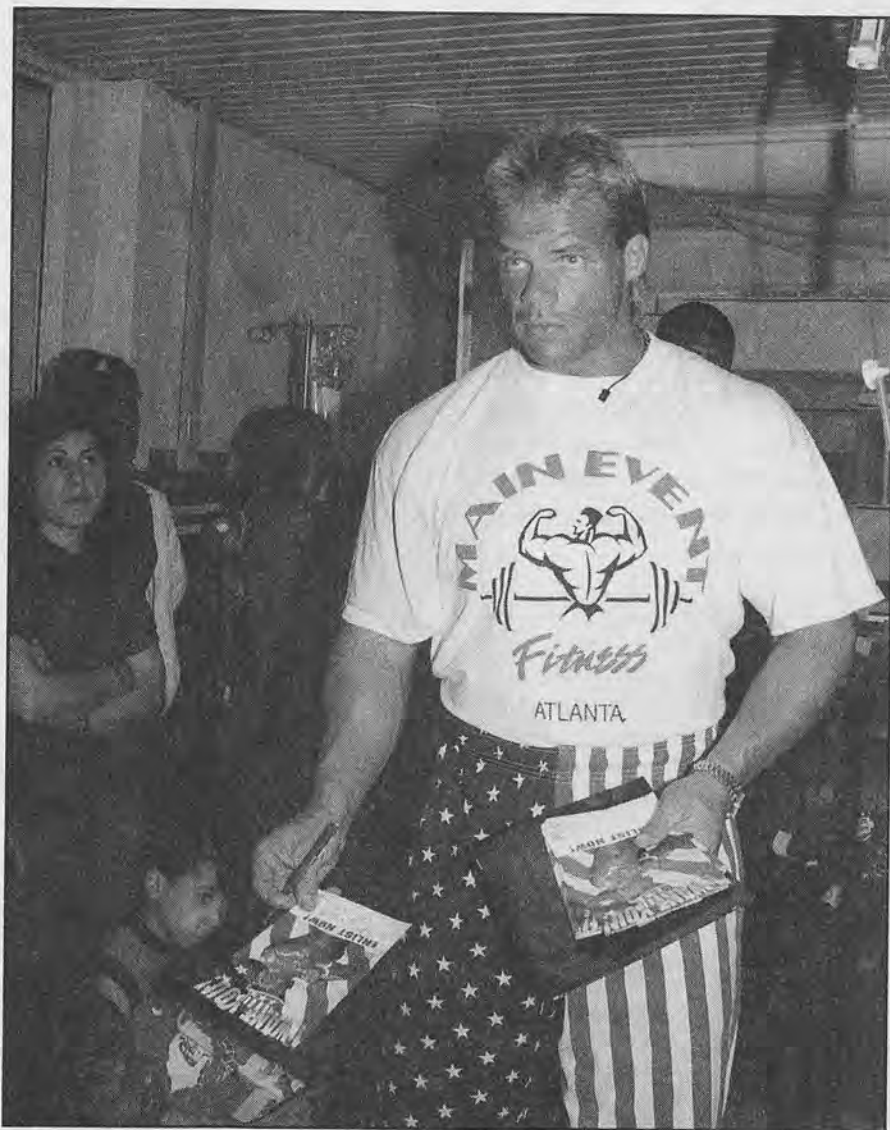

McMahon must shoulder the blame for all of the sport's ills, simply because he was the primary beneficiary of all of its success in the 1980s. As much as my publisher wants to editorially disagree, McMahon is the unquestioned leader in wrestling. There is not a single decision-maker anywhere in the sport who has taken the bold steps that McMahon has. WCW and other copycat federations have just gotten in line and followed the leader.

It is those steps that have brought wrestling to its current state, with attendance and television ratings on the decline. While the popularity of the sport has, through its history, run in cycles, it would be a tragic mistake for the promoters to count on history repeating itself. In a lousy economy, with cutthroat competition for the advertising dollar and a viewing public that has turned channel-surfing into an art form, that could be a blueprint for disaster.

It is time for a drastic change, beginning at the top. The charges aside, McMahon has worn out his welcome as the sport's visionary. He has become too consumed with the bottom line to act as wrestling's caretaker. In fact, I don't believe there is anyone in the executive offices of the WWF or WCW who is up to the task.

Since turning fan favorite last summer, Lex Luger has received the lion's share of publicity from the WWF. Yet for all the hype, Luger has yet to win a title in the federation.

Wrestling doesn't need steroid monsters. It doesn't need foam tombstones. It doesn't need title matches in which lack of competent officiating is made up for with double-disqualifications. It doesn't need the same old faces executing the same old finishing maneuvers. And it doesn't need Vince McMahon.

Wrestling needs more athleticism and less showmanship. It needs hot

The next time you become uninterested or disgusted with a wrestling telecast, before you change the channel, take a look at the brand name on the remote control. Chances are it comes from a country where wrestling is a thriving industry, neither beset by scandal nor threatened by indifference.

Luger—why should he be held to a different standard than other athletes? After a decent season, a ballplayer suddenly wants out of the six-year contract he signed last year. Luger is simply exercising his right as a spoiled, over-paid prima donna. Lay off the guy.

Dear Eddie,

Of all the following old-time greats, who do you think would enjoy the most success today: Lou

I am young again. It's 1967. Second grade. I pull the chair out from Mary Dorney. She punches me in the head, breaking my glasses. How can I think while just ahead the grim reality of another Ric Flair title reign looms? It's gonna happen. I don't want it to happen. It shouldn't happen.

Big Van Vader is a throwback, the kind of champion who rules and dominates, a monarch. He should run out the decade, the century. But there's too much Flair in the air. You can feel the whole federation gearing for a Flair revival. It's like WCW rolled the dice and the card they drew said, Flair wins another title; take three steps back.

Haven't you heard? You can't go home again. Don't they know not to look back, that something may be gaining on them. A Vader victory would put an exclamation point on his title reign. I know it won't happen.

I'll tell you what—if Vader wins, I'll do Bill Apter's laundry for a week. Big deal, you say? Have you ever seen Bill's socks?

Lex Luger's desire to get a second chance at Yokozuna's WWF World title shouldn't be all that surprising. It's simply wrestling's equivalent of renegotiating your contract.

Dear Eddie,

I read somewhere recently where Bill Apter called Lex Luger a good and noble man. Would you explain what that means? Where I come from, a man is as good as his word. If he signs a contract that says he gets one shot at the title, then he takes his shot, makes it his best one, and—win or lose—goes home. Case closed. No gripe. No moan. What do you think?

would rock the house. Kowalski used to clock how fast from the time the bell rang he could have his opponent in the hospital. He used to make bets with other wrestlers, and often earned more money that way than his regular purse would amount to. I bet Killer could come back today and give stiffs like Terry Taylor or Rick Martel a run for their money.

Dear Eddie,

What's the deal with all these wrestlers testifying against Vince McMahon? Without Vince, these bums would be left out on the street. He made them big stars. They call that gratitude? They're nothing but a bunch of yellow backstabbing cowards.

AARON OFSKEE
Brighton Beach, NY

Dear Aaron,

The question that will be resolved in court is: How exactly did Vince make them big stars? Through promotion, persistence, encouragement, and marketing genius? Or through eight-inch needles filled with steroid juice? Let's wait for the trial before passing judgment on Vince. Passing judgment on a thug like you is much easier. You cannot comprehend the pressure athletes are under. Testimony from football players is damning and compelling: The margin for error is so slim that you need every advantage. If the guy across the line from you is crazed on drugs, and your coach expects you to block him, what are your choices? Shoot up or speak out. The wrestlers testifying are performing a brave service, one they should be commended for.

Dear Eddie,

What's Jim Cornette's deal? One day he's at the center of the WWF title controversy, the next he's running amuck in Smoky Mountain. It seems all the great managers stayed put in one place. I think Cornette should settle down if he expects to get any respect.

WANDA LYTLÉ

Dear Wanda,

I'm not certain respect, especially from you, is of particular concern to Jim Cornette. He prefers to get headlines like he gets money—in no particular denomination, as long as there are lots of them. Cornette's genius is in quantity, not quality. He'll never perch at the very top, but he'll buzz everywhere around it. □

Jim Cornette will never dominate any single federation. He's more concerned with throwing his weight around everywhere, so he'll be a nuisance in both Smoky Mountain Wrestling and the WWF for years to come.

SHAWN MICHAELS:

“ENOUGH OF THIS KID STUFF, GIVE ME RAMON!”

By Dave Rosenbaum

STEPPINGSTONES ARE for prospects, not for established pro wrestlers. And they're especially not for former Intercontinental and World tag team champions.

So why in the world was Shawn Michaels bothering with Doink the Clown, The Kid, and even the Hart family when he had more important things to worry about, like reclaiming the I-C belt from Razor Ramon?

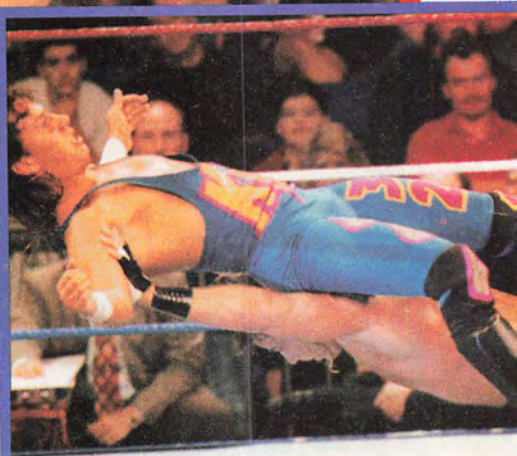

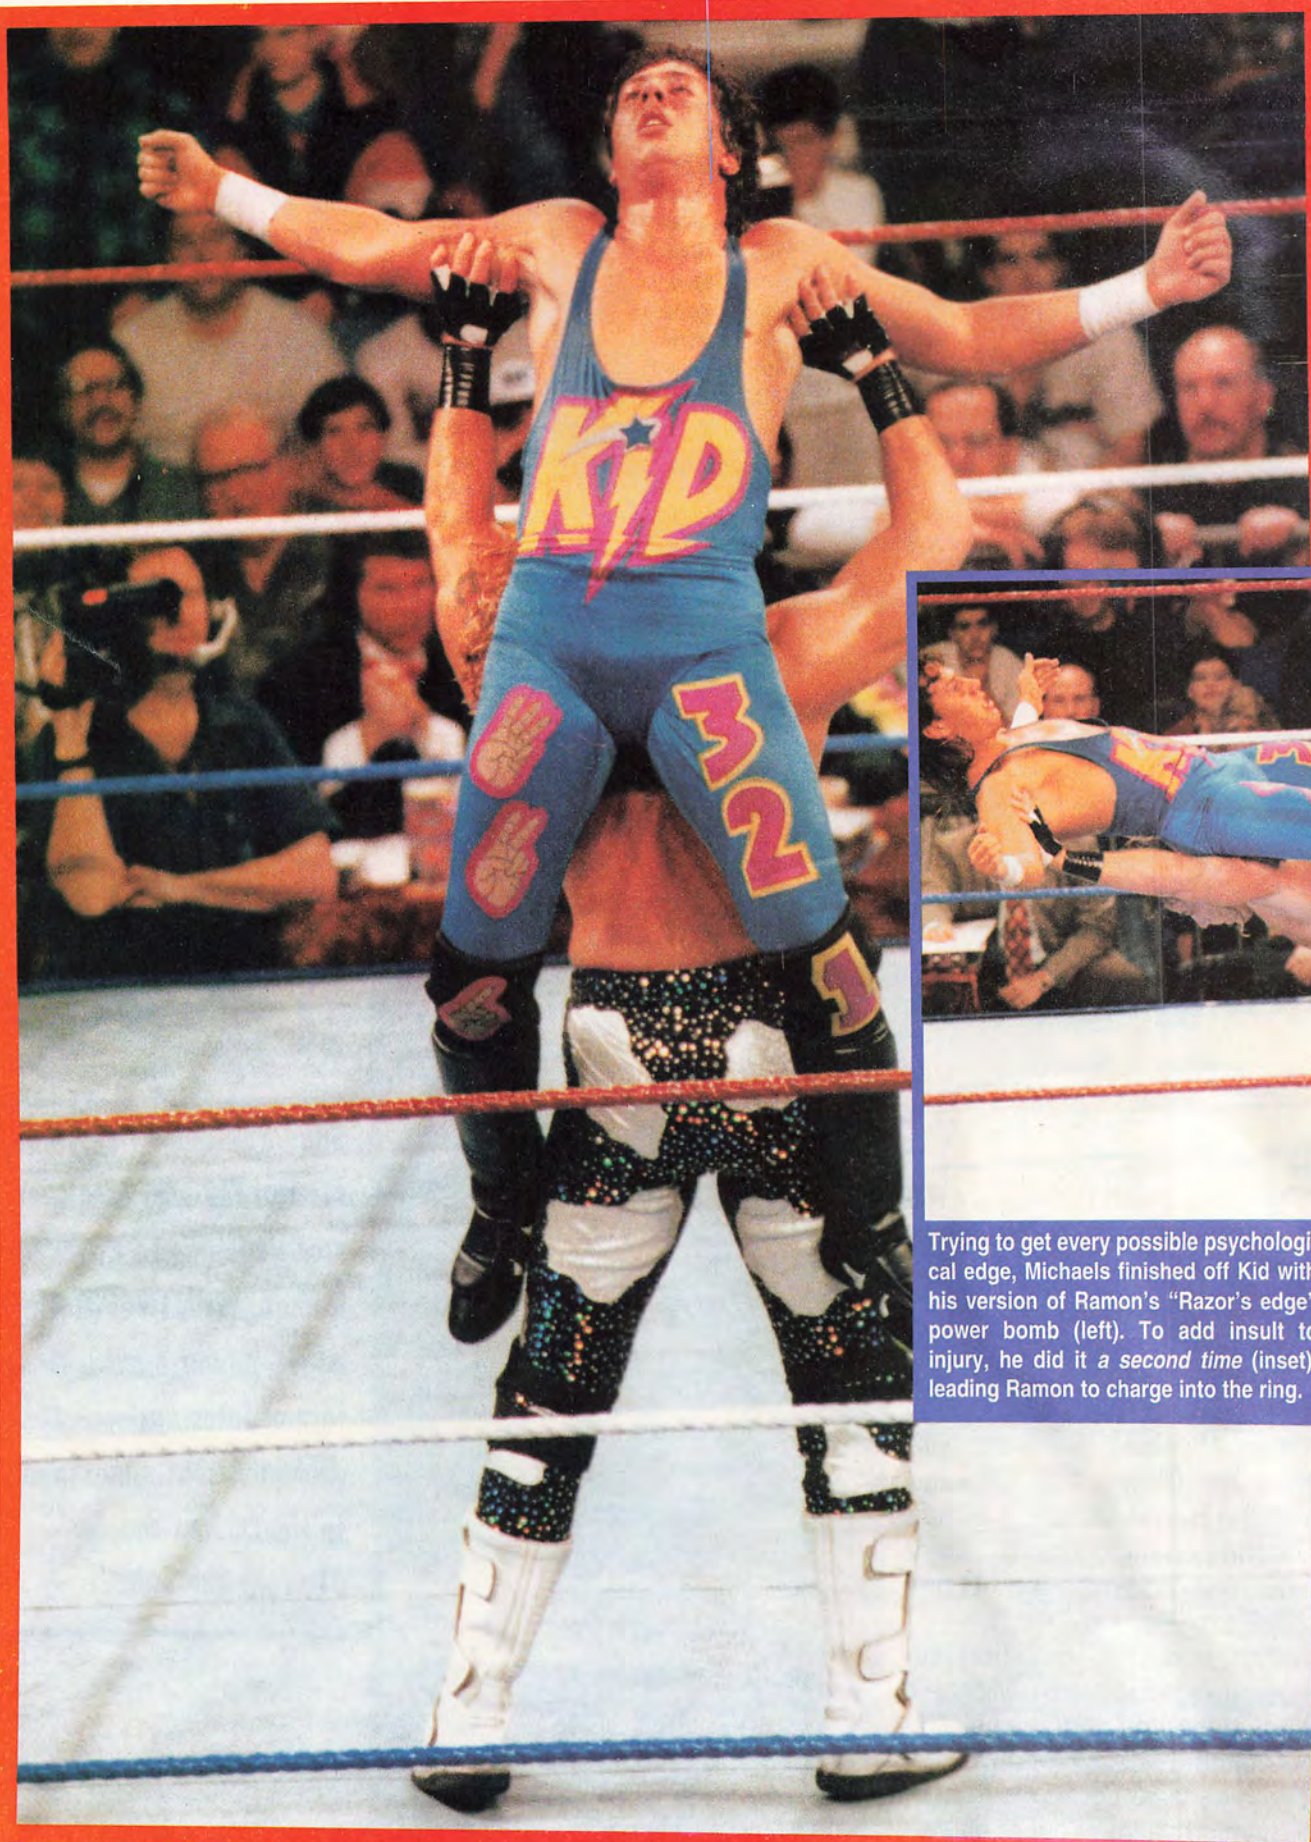

That was the question on everyone's mind when Michaels stepped into the ring against The Kid during a WWF Monday Night Raw broadcast not too long ago. Something seemed out of place.

Shawn Michaels and The Kid are in some ways comparable; both are relatively small wrestlers with plenty of guile. But Michaels' experience and desire to get at current champion Razor Ramon proved to be too much for Kid.

Shawn Michaels' only use for The Kid was as a steppingstone to Razor Ramon. With two "Razor's edge" power bombs, the former Intercontinental champion sent a message to the current champ: "I want the belt!"

Trying to get every possible psychological edge, Michaels finished off Kid with his version of Ramon's "Razor's edge" power bomb (left). To add insult to injury, he did it a second time (inset), leading Ramon to charge into the ring.

"The WWF suspended Michaels a while back, but it's as if they're extending his punishment by refusing to give him what he really wants: A series of matches against Ramon," WWF expert Thomas Pilliard said. "I think this match proved that Ramon wants Michaels as badly as Michaels wants Ramon."

Now they're going to get each other.

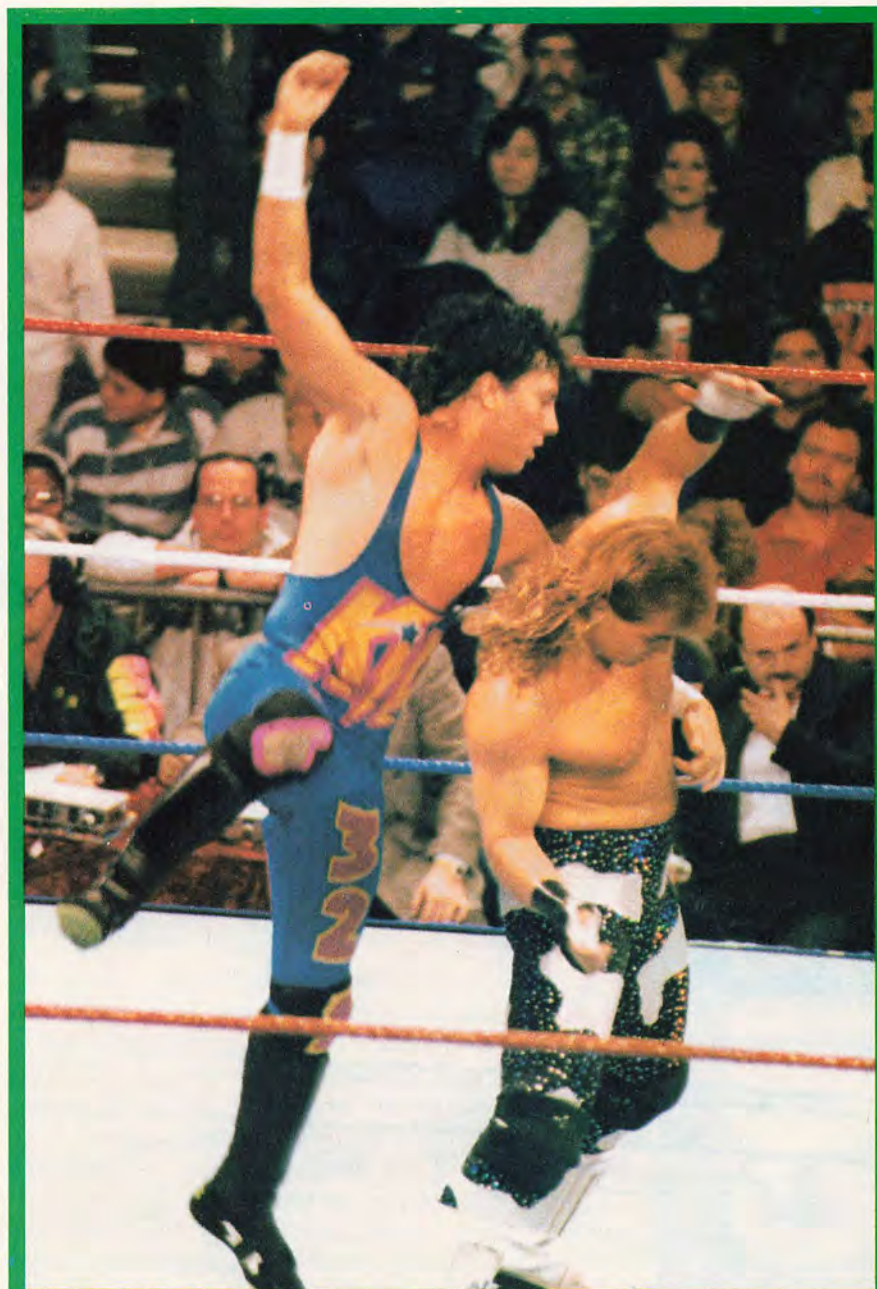

The "Bad Guy" made an impromptu appearance during the Kid-Michaels match. In a way, Ramon arrived even earlier than planned. When The Kid made a crucial mistake, Michaels took control and sent a message to Ramon. He drove Kid into the mat with a power bomb that was amusingly similar to Ramon's own "Razor's edge."

Ramon, as if he was waiting for a cue, ran to the ring after Michaels executed a second power bomb. He pulled Kid out of the ring and brawled with Michaels.

If all is right in the WWF, this was the beginning of what could be a long war between the current champion and the former champion. Michaels made the first move earlier in the evening, when he interfered in a match between Ramon and Diesel. After Michaels pounded Ramon, the champion vowed revenge. That's just what Michaels wanted to hear. The two power bombs against Kid were Michaels' answer. They meant, "I want you worse than you want me."

Kid certainly isn't in the same class as Bret Hart, whom Michaels also faced after his brief exile. But beating Kid helps Michaels chip away at Ramon's psyche.

Give Michaels credit for going through Kid to get to Ramon. He knows the "Bad Guy" and the underdog are friends, dating back to the incident last summer when Kid stole Ramon's money and Ted DiBiase ridiculed the Razor.

"Razor became Kid's protector," said a WWF wrestler. "He really watches out for him, and that gives Kid a little more confidence in the ring. But I'm sure Kid didn't realize what that meant. He found himself in the middle of the Michaels vs. Ramon thing."

Michaels was already a frustrated wrestler by the time he fought Kid at Raw. A case can be made that it wouldn't have mattered who his opponent was that night; Michaels was sick and tired of wrestling the Doinks,

The Von Erich family in 1986: (From left) Chris, Mike, Kevin, mother Doris, and Kerry. The Von Erichs had six sons; Kevin is the lone survivor.

KEVIN VON ERICH

NOBODY COULD POSSIBLY know how he feels. Kevin Von Erich, one of six sons of Fritz and Doris Von Erich, is now the only brother left in a profound tragedy.

Jack, 7, accidentally electrocuted himself in 1959. David, 25, died of acute enteritis during a wrestling tour of Japan in 1984. Mike, 23, died of a drug overdose in 1987 after toxic shock syndrome ravaged his body and affected his mental health. Chris, 21, devastated by Mike's death, died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound in 1991. On February 18, 1993, in Denton, Texas, Kerry, 33, was found dead with a self-inflicted bullet wound through his chest.

Kerry had been going through severe problems. The day before his death, he had been indicted on a cocaine possession charge while on probation for a 1992 drug conviction. With life collapsing around him and a jail sentence likely, Kerry took his life.

Ten years ago, the Von Erichs were wrestling's golden boys. Handsome, athletic, and charismatic, the boys stole the hearts of Texas wrestling fans and found similar adoration worldwide. But everything went wrong.

Mystery has been attached to each of the deaths, and countless theories have been offered on what made three brothers commit suicide. Many questions remain unanswered. And the tragedy runs deeper than most people know—Fritz and Doris divorced two years ago after 43 years of marriage.

Kevin, 36, is the oldest of the Von Erich sons. A star during the boom years of World Class Wrestling in Texas in the mid-1980s, he is now semi-retired with no plans of returning to the ring. He and his wife, Pam, live in Shreveport, Louisiana, with their four children: Kristen, 12, Jill, 8, David Michael Ross, 5, and Kevin Kerry Marsh, 1.

PRO WRESTLING ILLUSTRATED Senior Writer Dave Rosenbaum spoke with Von Erich early in October.

"His pain is obviously very deep," Rosenbaum reported. "People doubt the Von Erichs' sincerity, but Kevin exposed his soul. At one point during the interview, he was talking about growing up and how close he was to his brothers. Out of nowhere he paused and said, 'I do feel lonely.'"

"I thought he was going to cry, and then, I think, he did."

"I'm the only one alive, and some people are taking bets on me. But there's no way that's going to happen to me because I have a reason to live and a good one. I'm happy with my life."

PRO WRESTLING ILLUSTRATED: I understand you're writing a screenplay. What is it about?

VON ERICH: It's going to be the story of the Von Erich brothers, being the older brother, and how it all went down. There's a whole lot of guesswork and a lot of people are making up the whole story. I'd like to get the facts out. My brothers were really good people.

PWI: Why have you stopped wrestling?

VON ERICH: I'm still in shape, but wrestling is just not fun for me. I didn't leave the business. The business left me.

PWI: How do you rationalize what has happened to your family?

VON ERICH: I look at it like this: My brothers and I lived really dangerously. We were a really reckless group, always showing off for each other, like walking on bridges in Japan and taking every chance we could. We were just young kids. We felt like we could do anything and nothing would hurt us. It was reckless. I'm really surprised that I survived it.

PWI: So what's your opinion about what happened?

VON ERICH: I'm hearing all this guesswork about what made the Von Erichs do it. Nothing made us do it. It just happened. We enjoyed ourselves to death. We were always showing off for each other. We used to have this thing called the chance of the day, where we'd take a chance on our lives every day. Dave was always too smart for that, so he'd just watch. We'd jump on wild bulls' backs, jump on trains going fast. I almost got beheaded one time doing that. We'd get on the roof of a car at highway speed. You start thinking nothing can get you and you're indestructible. That's part of being in sports. We were blessed with good bodies, good balance. We showed off for each other.

PWI: Why did you survive?

VON ERICH: That's a tough question. I think only the good Lord can answer that. Kerry really didn't have anything to live for. He had his two beautiful daughters and a wife he loved, but then he'd come home and all of his stuff would be moved out. She'd move all of his stuff out. Kerry felt like he was in a hopeless situation. Kerry was no saint, either. They both treated each other kind of rough. He had pretty much come to an understanding the day he killed himself. He just left having lunch with Kathy, his wife. Kerry was going to jail and he was afraid of never seeing his girls again.

PWI: Did you have any idea he was going to kill himself?

VON ERICH: I had an inkling. I talked to him 30 minutes before he did it. He said, "Kevin, I'm about to kill myself." We had talked for about an hour. We told some good dirty jokes, we laughed, and he told me, "I'm going to kill myself." I thought I had him talked out of it. He said, "I just didn't want to be like Mike and not say goodbye." That's when I begged him. I said, "Don't do this thing. Don't leave me alone. You're my only brother. Don't leave me." I thought They're the two greatest wrestlers of their generation—skilled, charismatic, beloved. Imagine the impact if Ric Flair and Hulk Hogan decided to join forces! It's now a distinct possibility.

Flair and Hogan try to iron out a minor difficulty, while Jimmy Hart examines the fine print of a proposed contract. An alliance among these three would give them unprecedented clout with federations and promoters.

HOGAN AND FLAIR'S SECRET MEETING . . .

AND PWI WAS THERE!

By Dave Rosenbaum

RIC FLAIR LEARNED his lesson a long time ago: Burning bridges isn't a good idea from a business standpoint. This might sound like an unusual realization for a man who has made more enemies than nearly anyone else in wrestling, but it's actually a sign of Flair's people skills.

"I make sure all my opponents know nothing that goes on between us is personal," he said. "It's all in the game."

How else would Flair have been able to put together the Superpower Summit to end all Superpower Summits. If we thought it was news when Hulk Hogan and Sting met for over an hour in Japan last year, just imagine our surprise when we found Hogan, manager Jimmy Hart, and Flair in front of our cameras ... together!

And they were speaking in a civilized manner.

When Flair was in the WWF, he battled Hogan several times. Even while both were in different federations, they've always had a rivalry. Yet each respects the other's accomplishments, both in and out of the ring.

other," Hart explained cryptically to a friend—but there was far more to this day than met the eye.

Speculation is raging throughout wrestling's inner circles that Hogan, Hart, and Flair talked about forming a high-powered organization of the sport's greatest stars. There may, in fact, be a connection between the Hogan-Flair-Hart get-together and Hogan's meeting with Sting in Japan last spring. If these four are on the verge of competing under one banner, they would surely put all other stables to shame ... including Flair's own Four Horsemen.

They would also have tremendous bargaining power. Would they wrestle in WCW, the WWF, in a Japanese federation, or in all three? Hogan-Sting-Flair-Hart would have so much power that they could force the WWF and WCW into a share agreement. Federation heads would no longer be in the position to set agendas.

"It's an incredible concept," agreed Bill Watts, WCW's former vice-president of wrestling operations. "Promoters have always worried about the day when the wrestlers call all of the shots. If these four men got together, they could basically do whatever they wanted. They'd make the rules."

It's as if an Olympic-style "dream team" decided to form its own NBA franchise, or if a baseball team rounded up Barry Bonds, Greg Maddux, Juan Gonzalez, and Joe Carter. The possibilities are mind-boggling.

Hogan and Flair are nearing the ends of great careers.

Hogan has, in fact, retired and unretired at least twice. Only under very special conditions would he unretire again. Flair, having accomplished all he set out to do, needs something different to keep himself interested.

Sting has a different motivation; he's a peak performer doing very well on his own. Nonetheless, he couldn't resist the opportunity to team with Hogan and Flair.

Hart hasn't had much to do as a manager over the past year or so, and he knows Hogan won't wrestle too much longer. However, he could use the prestige of the "Hulkster," Flair's Hogan ostensibly visited Charlotte to promote Flair's gym. Once the public display was over, the two joined Hart to discuss the possibilities of teaming up.

When the picture-taking to promote Flair's gym in Charlotte, North Carolina, was done, the trio retired to a backroom for nearly 45 minutes. They emerged smiling and silent, unwilling to divulge the contents of their extraordinary meeting.

Hogan and Hart were there to help their old WWF compadre—"One hand washes the innumerable contacts, and Sting's reputation in the wrestling community to recruit younger stars into the fold. Who wouldn't want to be associated with them?

Several insiders have speculated that Sting is no longer part of the package, and it may be why he wasn't invited. Flair, Hogan, and Hart might form their own team, or they could recruit two more "Horsemen." Possibilities include Lex Luger, Davey Boy Smith, and even The Ultimate Warrior, who's in early retirement and is, like Hogan, seeking success on the film and TV circuit.

Flair laughed at the speculation.

"You boys are getting ahead of yourselves," Flair said. "You're taking wishes and hoping they come true. Hulk and Jimmy did me a favor, that's all. We went back to my office to speak because the three of us don't get together too often. We're not getting together. I don't even know if it would work."

Flair has a point. The California Angels used free agency to put together a team of high-priced superstars. They won three American League West titles over an eight-year span, but a World Series game has yet to be played in Anaheim. The New York Rangers, despite their spending, haven't won a Stanley Cup since—shout it, Islanders and Devils fans!—

1940. The Minnesota Vikings traded away their future for Herschel Walker and never saw the slightest return.

"The Four Horsemen are the greatest team that ever lived," Flair said. "Learn from history. Appreciate what you saw. Quit dreaming. That's good advice, boys."

Maybe. Hart and Hogan wouldn't comment on anything related to their meeting with Flair. Sting has also been silent on the issue. Several WCW and WWF wrestlers said they had no insight on the meeting and heard no rumors of a Flair-Hogan-Hart get-together.

That doesn't mean it won't happen. Hogan, stung by media criticism and reports of steroid abuse, carefully guards his privacy. Hart has stood by him, but has done little else lately related to wrestling. Flair likes to tease. As a practice, Sting doesn't disclose private discussions to the media.

We have been left in a listen-and-wait situation. For now, all we have are pictures. Food for thought. Grizzle for the rumor mill. Delicious anticipation.

Just eat it up. □

If Flair and Hogan are to form some sort of united front, Hart will have to play a crucial role in keeping peace between two men who are as well-known for their immense egos as they are for their ring success.

A photograph of a wrestling match between Rob Van Dam and Sabu. Rob Van Dam is in the air, performing a move on Sabu. SABU

ALL RAID

Though only semi-active for the past several months, Rob Van Dam jumped at the opportunity to wrestle Sabu, whom many consider to be the best young flyer in the sport.

Before Van Dam can launch his attack from the turnbuckles, Sabu flips toward him and in one swift motion takes him down with a flying headscissors.

Rob Van Dam had heard a lot about Sabu, and wanted to discover for himself just how good the wild youngster really is. What he found out was enough to make him realize that maybe semi-retirement isn't such a bad thing!

By Andy Rodriguez

ROB VAN DAM is no dummy. Ask anyone who knows him to describe him and they will tell you that he is one of the most thoughtful and intelligent competitors in the business. His ring style may be reckless at times, they say, but his actions are planned out very carefully.

They swear that Van Dam knew precisely what he was doing when he determined he wanted to wrestle Sabu. Though in a sort of self-imposed semi-retirement, Van Dam keeps close watch on the wrestling world. He had heard much about Sabu. He knew that Sabu is a reckless and dangerous competitor, and a talented one.

Even with that in mind, Van Dam decided he needed to wrestle Sabu. He wanted to prove to himself and to others that he had what it took to defeat this unpredictable, wild wrestler.

"The challenge was what I craved," Van Dam said. "Everyone of us in this sport craves a challenge. I knew that Sabu would test me like I've never been tested before. Besides, with me not wrestling a full-time schedule anymore, people begin to wonder if I'm still the daring high-flyer they've been seeing all these years. I had to show them that I was."

So Van Dam got in touch with a Michigan promoter and persuaded him to attempt to sign the match. It turned out that wasn't much of a problem at all.

"Sabu really wanted this one,"

There are few wrestlers who have the agility and reflexes to avoid a Sabu moonsault. The wrestlers earned each other's respect in this memorable encounter.

It simply wouldn't be a Sabu match without a broken table! Action spilled outside the ring, and the two devastated a metal table lying nearby.

said an associate of his. "I think he wanted it almost as much as Van Dam did. Sabu's heard plenty about Van Dam. He knew his reputation well. That gave him plenty of motivation. He was motivated to destroy whatever reputation Van Dam has built."

As fans filed into the gymnasium for this special encounter, they knew nothing of the pre-match preparations undertaken by both men. Those preparations underscored the differences between them. While Van Dam did calisthenics, Sabu banged his head against the wall. While Van Dam ate a well-balanced meal, Sabu hurriedly wolfed down a package of uncooked ramen noodles, the kind sold for 15 cents apiece at supermarkets.

"Boy, won't this be a fun night?" said a backstage attendant.

However, while the two may have different ring philosophies and different outlooks on life in general, they both are among wrestling's greatest aerialists. They would demonstrate that well during this highly anticipated encounter.

Van Dam executed the match's first memorable maneuver, nailing Sabu with a legdrop off the top rope. The move excited the crowd, and enraged the maniacal Sabu, who suddenly seemed even more determined to make Van Dam pay for the mistake of challenging him.

Sabu achieved his revenge fairly quickly, when he caught Van Dam with a sensational Frankenstein that even Scott Steiner and Marty Jannetty would have given high marks.

"See," said one ringside fan to his companion, "Sabu isn't all that crazy. It takes brains to do a Frankenstein like that."

Van Dam would later admit that the move made him even more respectful of Sabu's abilities. But that's what he said after the match. During it, he was just looking to survive.

After avoiding Sabu's attempt to flip on him from the top rope, Van Dam became more daring. When Sabu wandered out of the ring, Van Dam executed a flip of his own from the ring right out to the floor. Sabu was stunned mentally as well as physically.

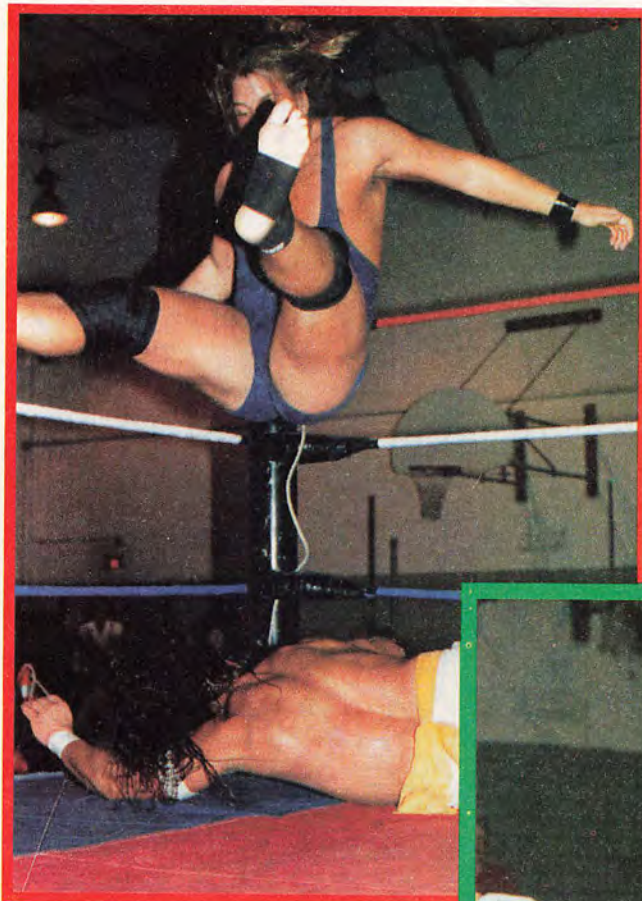

"I did not think he would come at me in that fashion," he later said through an interpreter. "Only after that was I prepared for anything he might do."

Certainly he was prepared for Van Dam's sunset flip pin attempt. The maneuver was done brilliantly, but Sabu refused to lose to it. More painful to him was the flying bodypress Van Dam used against him.

"That was one of the best bodypresses I've ever done," Van Dam offered later. "After that, I really felt like I had him where I wanted him."

But who can ever really say he has Sabu where he wants him? Years of training by The Sheik have made Sabu doubly dangerous when it looks as though he's ready to go down for the final time. If Van Dam didn't realize that before the match, he did when Sabu started beating on him with a chair. The more Van Dam struggled, the more intense-the craziness he's capable of."

Sabu returned the compliment, sort of.

"Van Dam is a fine wrestler," he said, "but tonight I proved who was the greater. I proved myself a better wrestler and a superior risk-taker. Go ahead and ask Van Dam if he would like a rematch."

We did. The answer?

"First of all," he responded. "I'm not full-time, and second, I've satisfied my curiosity about him. But if he wants another go ... I'm ready."

Is that an air-raid siren we hear? □ ly Sabu pummeled him.

Still, Sabu would rather display his ring skills than use foreign objects. Once again, he went airborne, flipping onto Van Dam from the ring to the floor. It was such a powerful maneuver that fans seated many rows back appeared to wince in pain when Sabu came crashing down.

Van Dam had taken the match because he wanted to experience for himself if the crazed Sabu truly lived up to his reputation. Van Dam answered in the affirmative quite willingly.

"I know that out there tonight he and I put on quite a show," said Van Dam. "Guys like us show it won't be long before the high-flyers really dominate this sport. He is every bit as good as they said he was, even better. Of course, he resorts to rulebreaking too easily, but I expected he would. I also think I didn't see half

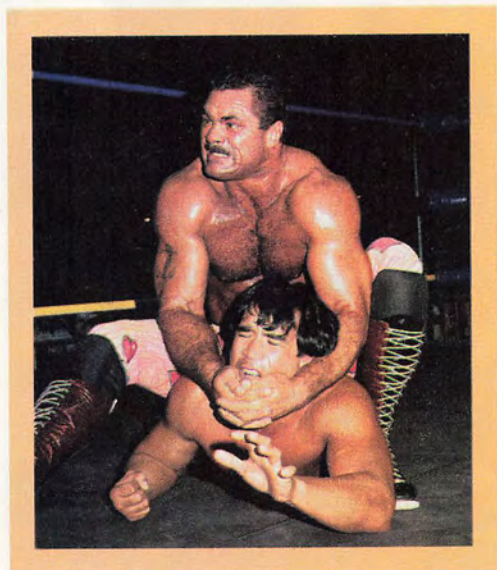

Van Dam expected punishment from Sabu, and got it. He said of the match, "Guys like us show it won't be long before the high-flyers really dominate this sport."

THE STORY RICK RUDE DOESN'T WANT YOU TO READ

Every now and then, Rick is no longer Rude. In fact, the "Ravishing One" can occasionally be downright thoughtful and perceptive on important social issues of the day, much like his opponent, fan favorite Rick Steamboat.

"Rick Rude" and "role model" would seem to be mutually exclusive phrases. But at times, he can be far different than his "Ravishing" persona.

(Editor's note: This first-person piece was faxed to us by Senior Writer Eddie Ellner. We initially hesitated to print it, as we weren't sure this conversation took place on the record. But it's so revealing, so unlike Rick Rude, that we felt obligated to run it.)

SOMETIMES THE JOB takes you places that make you feel guilty about cashing a paycheck. Tonight I am sunk into a leather chair at Angelika's, a Santa Monica hotspot offering 32 varieties of "smart drinks"—herb cocktails alleged to increase intelligence, perception, and libido. Not to mention increased attraction to an array of beautiful women, many of whom can't keep their eyes off my table. Though I am looking sharp in a new haircut and "Grunge Kills" tank-top, I must admit some of the attention is directed toward my tablemate, his divine grace, "Ravishing" Rick Rude. ELLNER: Look at all these women. They're, they're ... RUDE: ... a dime a dozen. EE: A what? Jeez, Rick. You can't be

Would Ric Flair be somewhat more tolerant of Rude if his trunks featured a message telling kids to stay in school, instead of expressing lust for Fifi, Flair's maid?

Beating Dustin Rhodes may not be enough for Rude these days. He briefly considered changing his "Ravishing" persona, repositioning himself as a champion of children.

that jaded. Look at the blonde over there. I mean, I would, I don't know—perhaps surrender a limb to talk to her.

RR: Watch this. (Rude strolls over to the blonde's table. He takes her hand to his lips and gently kisses it. I'm thinking: This is the '90's, she's gonna slug him. She stands up, grabs Rude's head, and presses his lips to hers. A major kiss. A screen kiss. She thanks him—thanks him!—and leaves. As Rude returns to the table, I realize I am in the presence of a sinister and alien force.)

EE: What did she thank you for?

RR: It's hard to explain. Some people can add large figures in their heads ...

EE: You just pick up great figures at bars.

RR: Never run from your talent. (We turned our attention to the TV. A four-year-old child wearing a "Cop Killer" T-shirt was being escorted from his pre-school. He had brought a small handgun to his show-and-tell class.)

RR: Turn the sound up. (One of those heavy-handed anchormen exercised his baritone.)

TV ANNOUNCER: When asked where he got the gun, the child told police his nine-year-old brother told him that Ice Cube, a popular rap star, said it's time "young brothers took care of business." When asked where his parents were, the little boy began to cry. It was later determined his parents hadn't been home in four days. In Washington, a Senate subcommittee met to consider banning the sales of "gangsta rap" and other explicit audio and video material to children under 12 years of age.

EE: That's ridiculous.

RR: Four years old. That kid. He was four years old.

EE: And his parents should be arrested for child abuse.

RR: It's not gonna help him. He's still gonna listen to the same music. He's still gonna be influenced by the same images.

EE: Education starts in the home. It's the responsibility of the parent to—

RR: But if there are no parents, then whose responsibility is it?

EE: What are you saying?

RR: When the family breaks down, all you have are role models. If these kids worship singers telling them to go kill cops, that's what they're going to do. No one's around telling them to grow up to be wrestlers and firemen like our parents did. (We sipped our "smart cocktails" in silence.)

RR: Maybe I should change my ways.

EE: How so?

RR: It's time I took my fame seriously. I'm in a position of influence. Maybe I should paint a message on my tights, like "Stay In School," or something.

EE: That really would be different.

RR: I have a responsibility. Children watch me. They want to be like me. What kind of message am I sending out there?

EE: Love. You're expressing great love.

RR: For who? My opponent's wife?

EE: Love is love.

RR: I'm serious. I'm gonna change. No more "Ravishing Rick." No more womanizing. From now on I'm Rick Rude, champion of children.

EE: I think you've had too much flaxseed oil. (At that moment, another blonde walked into the bar, a blonde so blonde she made the other one look brunette. The ultra-blonde zeroed in on Rude, who stopped in mid-preach.)

RR: What was I saying?

EE: I don't remember.

RR: Good. Keep it that way. I'll be right back.

He never came back. But I got the scoop of the month: Rick Rude does have a social conscience—but only in certain places. □

Rick Rude may be a rulebreaker, but even he is aghast at what is happening to kids today. He is aware that he's a role model, and wants to do all he can to help society.

Knobs wrestled in the Army; Sags played football and wrestled at Ferrum College in Virginia ... Both were kicked out for getting into too many fights ... In 1985, trained for five months under Brad Rheingans at Verne Gagne's wrestling school ... Both debuted in singles competition later that year, and formed a tag team in 1986 ... Won the AWA Southern belts in 1987 and lost them to The Rock 'n' Roll RPMs on September 19 in Memphis ... # THE NASTY BOYS

Brian Knobs & Jerry Sags

FAVORITE MANEUVER

Spike piledriver. An ordinary piledriver is so dangerous a maneuver that it draws an immediate disqualification in several federations. The Nastys take the maneuver to the nasty extreme by setting it up so that one of them (in this case Knobs) holds on to the opponent's legs while leaping off the top turnbuckle. Rarely will an individual escape a pin after absorbing such a blow.

MOST HATED OPPONENTS

Rick and Scott Steiner. The Nastys never won the WCW World tag team title from the brothers in their first go-round, but Scott Steiner still feels the effects of the Nastys' attacks. Even when Sags and Knobs returned to WCW this past summer, they talked about getting their hands on the Steiners, who were still in the WWF.

TOUGHEST OPPONENT

Money Inc. The Nastys tried and tried, but never won the WWF World tag team title from Irwin R. Schyster and Ted DiBiase. Sags and Knobs were somewhat blinded by their hate of former manager Jimmy Hart, who made sure Schyster and DiBiase kept the belts. This was a classic matchup of brawling vs. scientific wrestling and deviant behavior.

GREATEST MATCH

Vs. The Hart Foundation, WrestleMania VII. The Nastys collected their first major title with a surprising victory over Bret Hart and Jim Neidhart. Manager Jimmy Hart played a major role in the triumph, as he tossed Sags his motorcycle helmet. Sags used it on Neidhart, and Knobs covered him for the belts.

STEROID SCANDAL

THE WWF

EXPLAINED:

A CANDID Q & A

The recent charges brought against Vince McMahon and Titan Sports have raised many questions. In this special feature, Pro Wrestling Illustrated provides answers, clearing up misconceptions about steroids and their role in the sport

Steroids have a legitimate medical purpose to help rebuild muscle mass while rehabilitating atrophied limbs. The drugs cannot be purchased without a prescription, and can cause dangerous side effects to people who abuse them.

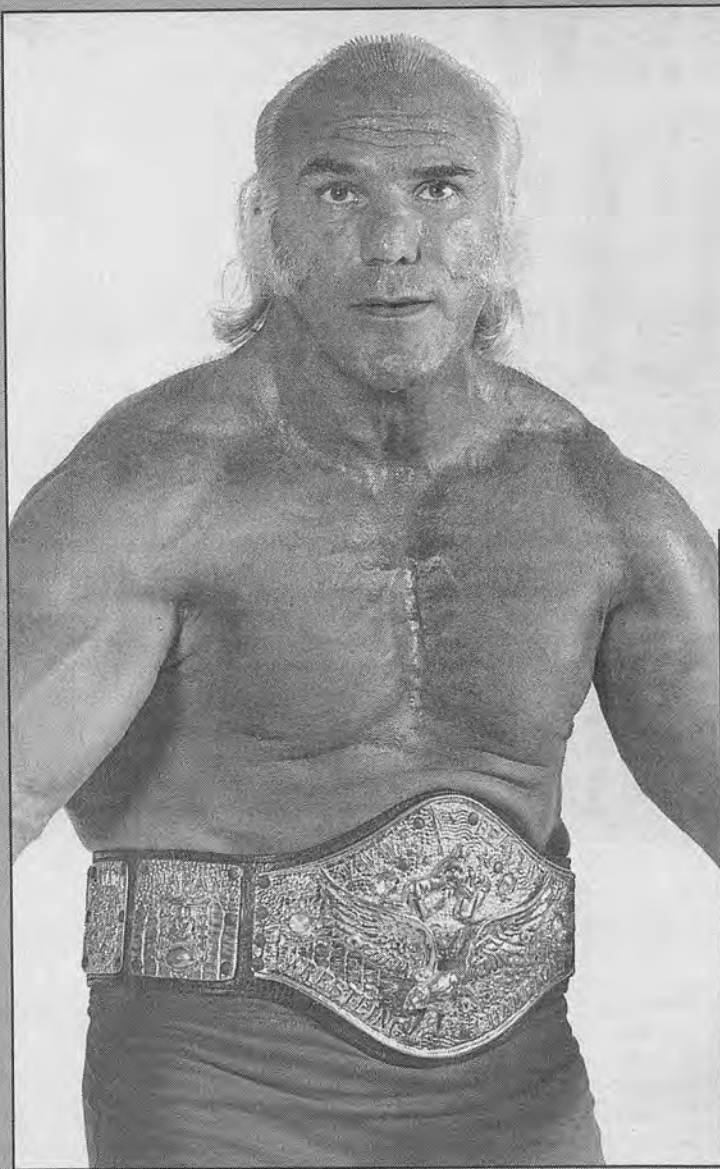

By Chris Bernucca

1. What are steroids? Steroids are natural organic compounds that come from the fatty tissue of plants and animals. There are many different kinds of steroids; most have very high-tech sounding names, like Anavar and Deca-Durabolin. Steroids are manufactured in both an injectable liquid form and as an ingestible pill.

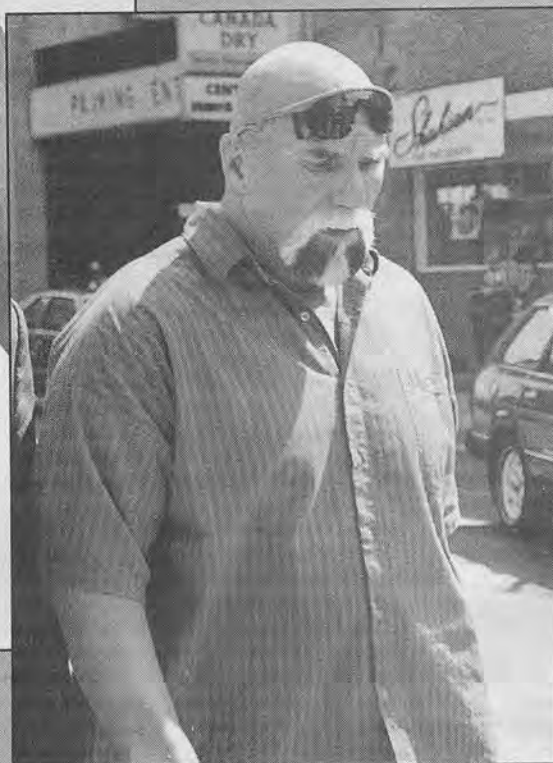

When properly prescribed, steroids are used to rebuild mass in an atrophied muscle. For example, if someone were to lose the use of a limb for a period of time, the muscles in that limb, however soft or hard, would grow softer and decrease in size. Steroids, combined with physical therapy and proper diet, would help restore the lost muscle mass.

Steroids cannot be purchased without a prescription from a physician. Use of steroids without a prescription is not only illegal but very dangerous, because they have serious side effects. Some of them are irritability, chronic acne, hair loss, sterility, cholesterol buildup, damage to the endocrine system

Former WWF World champion Superstar Graham has admitted to using steroids while competing, and says they have led to serious health problems. Graham, now 50, testified in 1991 that he had purchased steroids from a WWF physician.

(which assists in digestion), liver problems, tumors, strokes, and even heart attacks. Women taking steroids risk irreversible masculinizing effects. In short, someone taking steroids without a doctor's prescription is simply playing with his or her life.

2. Why would wrestlers use steroids? Wrestlers would use steroids in order to increase muscle mass and become bigger and stronger. When used in concert with a weight training regimen and a diet high in carbohydrates, steroids can add pounds to a person in just weeks.

Steroids increase fatty tissue on muscles, which can be enhanced and hardened by weight training. If there is more fatty tissue to work out, it stands to reason that there will be more muscle following the workout. Adherence to a diet and weight program can transfer much of the fatty tissue into hardened muscle mass. There are many ways to gain weight and increase muscle size; the use of steroids perhaps produces the quickest visible results.

It should be noted that wrestlers aren't the only athletes who would be inclined to use steroids. Football players, many of them offensive linemen who need mass and strength to protect quarterbacks and push around defenders, have admitted to using steroids.

However, steroid use is not restricted to oversized athletes. Many track and field stars have tested positive for steroids, including Ben Johnson, the Canadian sprinter who used steroids and a training program to eclipse the world record in the 100 meters at the 1988 Summer Olympics. He later tested positive for steroids and was stripped of his gold medal and world record. After a two-year ban, Johnson returned to competition but never approached his world-record time, indicating the effectiveness of his steroid use.

3. How do steroids affect wrestlers? Regardless of appearance, wrestlers are not supermen. They are affected by steroids in the same fashion as anyone else. Aside from their fat-soluble content, steroids also contain hormones, which can affect a person both physically and emotionally. When people inject or ingest steroids without the guidance of a doctor's prescription, they are subjecting themselves to all of the side effects mentioned in the answer to the first question.

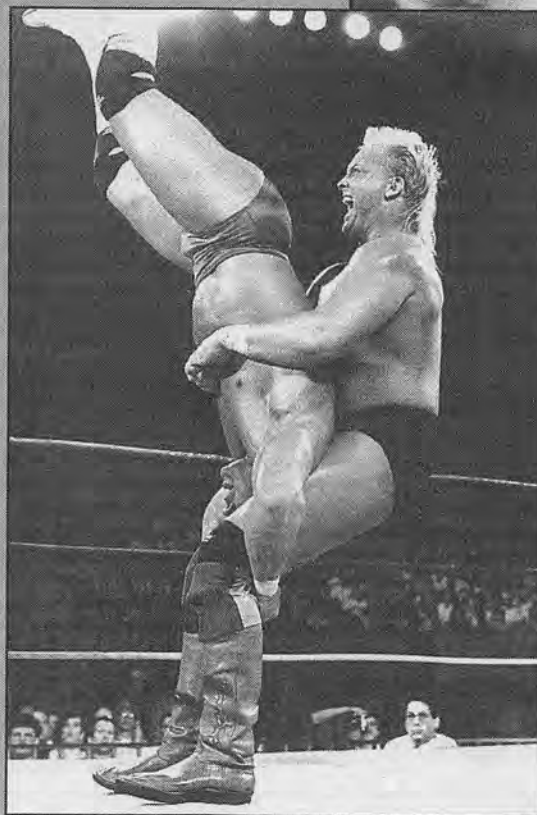

One of the most typical side effects is known as "roid rage." The irritability in a chronic steroid abuser can build to the point of mayhem, where the user lashes out verbally and physically at the slightest inconvenience or problem for no apparent reason. Edginess and hostility are usually two of the main personality traits in a person who abuses steroids.

4. What are the steroid laws and how have they changed? Steroids have always been classified as a prescription drug under federal law and cannot be dispensed without a valid medical prescription from a licensed physician. Prior to 1988, some physicians freely prescribed steroids to patients without acknowledging that they were in

In 1988, in response to a proliferation of incidents involving illegal steroid distribution to athletes, Congress developed and passed legislation prohibiting both possession of steroids with intent to distribute and the distrifact for the treatment of a disease or condition. Many athletes were receiving steroids for no reason other than to increase muscle mass to look better or to gain a competitive edge.

In 1991, Rick Martel (right) and Dan Spivey (below) both testified they had purchased steroids Dr. George Zahorian, a former WWF ringside physician.

bution of steroids for any purpose other than the treatment of disease in humans. It was these laws that in 1991 ultimately convicted Dr. George Zahorian, a former WWF ringside physician in Pennsylvania who was brought to trial on charges of illegally distributing steroids to WWF wrestlers and employees, including Vince McMahon.

5. Why has the federal government targeted the WWF?

The federal government is not picking on the WWF. It has built its case based on evidence stemming from the Zahorian trial, receipts of purchases, transfers, and mailings, and the repeated claims of former WWF wrestlers like Bruno Sammartino and David Shultz. Sammartino has steadfastly maintained that he and his son, David, were run out of the WWF because of his son's unwillingness to take steroids; McMahon has denied the charge. Shultz has said he and Hulk Hogan took steroids numerous times, a claim Hogan denies.

6. Could this mean the end of the WWF? It is highly unlikely that the WWF would go out of business because of the steroid scandal, although it would certainly suffer some financial setbacks. The federal government is attempting to seize Titan Tower, the corporate headquarters of the WWF in Stamford, Connecticut, because it alleges the facility was used to commit the violations. That would be a major setback for the federation and could jeopardize its future, but is highly unlikely at this time.

The WWF derives most of its income from two sources: the merchandising of its products like figurines, video games, and sportswear, and revenue from its four (or more) annual pay-per-view events. Television contracts and gate receipts from arena shows are secondary sources of income, although both serve an important role in generating the prime sources of income. The USA cable network and syndicated local programming allow the WWF to promote upcoming pay-per-view events. Arena shows provide the federation with souvenir stands to sell WWF-related products.

Vince McMahon Jr. was the mastermind behind the WWF's spectacular rise during the 1980s. The steroid indictment could damage the federation, and a conviction may lead to the seizure of its Connecticut headquarters.

There are some fans who will become disenchanted with the WWF and turn their backs on the federation. Others will remain loyal to the federation and continue their support. The majority of the WWF's fan base is children, some of whom are too young to understand the dangers and moral implications of steroid use. It will be up to the parents of these youngsters to act responsibly and make the right decision for their children.

There will certainly be a decrease in fan support, thus lowering total revenues. But the WWF will probably not go out of business.

7. Will Vince McMahon go to jail? Vince McMahon has been indicted, which means the federal government has presented enough evidence against him to justify bringing him to trial. That does not mean McMahon is guilty of any wrongdoing. As with anyone charged with a crime in a court of law in the U.S., he is innocent until proven guilty.

McMahon, who has pleaded innocent, has two options. He may proceed with a trial, hopeful and confident that his lawyers will prove his innocence, or at the very least disprove his guilt. Or he may have his lawyers try to come to an arrangement with the federal government, otherwise known as a plea bargain. In this probable scenario, McMahon would offer a plea of guilty to some of the lesser charges against him in exchange for a lesser sentence than the one imposed upon him would he be found guilty in a trial.

As the head of a major corporation who makes important decisions every day, McMahon cannot afford to be away from the WWF for any prolonged length of time. If he did agree to a plea bargain, a possible scenario would be for him to ask for no imprisonment in exchange for a long probationary period and fines. The government may agree to such terms, or it may insist that he serve some period of time in a minimum-security or medium-security federal penitentiary. However, if McMahon goes to trial and is found guilty, he could serve years in prison.

8. What does this mean for WCW and other federations?

If the federal government followed the scent from the Zahorian trial to McMahon and the WWF, you can bet that other federations would not be immune. Many former WWF wrestlers now compete in WCW, but that does not mean that every wrestler takes steroids. WCW claims to have a steroid testing program in place. However, it is rumored that some of WCW's wrestlers have been allowed to compete despite testing positive for steroids.

Although none of the smaller federations have ever been rocked by a steroid scandal, their existence depends mightily on the fortunes of the WWF and WCW. Promotions like the USWA and Smoky Mountain Wrestling do not have the national recognition factor that the WWF and WCW have. In fact, it is only through their association with the major federations that many fans are aware of them at all. The success of a wrestling promotion depends on fan support. Without the larger promotions leading the way, the USWA and SMW could be in severe difficulty. □

Zahorian, who was convicted in 1991 of illegally distributing steroids to wrestlers and other WWF personnel, has been named as an unindicted co-conspirator in the McMahon indictment.

press conference

Kevin Von Erich says his father Fritz was not an abusive parent, nor did he push his sons into becoming professional wrestlers.

I had him talked out of it. Thirty minutes later they found his body. He must have gone right out to do it.

PWI: I don't think anyone can imagine how painful that must have been for you.

VON ERICH: Any kid reading this article, if you only knew what kind of pain you'd inflict on people who love you and how it stays and stays and never goes away, you'd never do it. You may feel like dying at the moment, but if you knew what kind of pain it would put on people who love you, you'd never do it.

PWI: Watching five sons die must have been a terrible burden for your parents.

VON ERICH: My parents had been married for 43 years when Chris blew his brains out. Three months later they divorced. I don't know if one blames the other. I don't think it was either one's fault at all. I saw my dad the other day and my mother's in Dallas. My parents got together after Kerry died because they needed each other. They didn't want to start any more of the gossip rags. But my parents never got back together. Maybe they will get together one day. That's my dream. They need each other.

PWI: I know you have a wife and children, but do you ever feel lonely without your brothers?

VON ERICH: It is pretty lonely, but what are you going to do? Life goes on. I have my kids and I put all my love into them. You'll never know how close my brothers were to me. It is very lonely. I'm the only one alive, and some people are taking bets on me. But there's no way that's going to happen to me because I have a reason to live and a good one. I'm happy with my life.

PWI: You sound unusually optimistic for someone who has been through such hard times.

VON ERICH: You just have to be tough, just like in wrestling. It's not always easy, but the rewards are there. Just like in life. I think things are going to have a happy ending. I have two sons coming up and we just might see them become the masters of the iron claw (laughs).

PWI: Do you blame your brothers' deaths on wrestling?

VON ERICH: Not at all. If anything's to blame, it's our recklessness. Me and my brothers.

PWI: And you're through with wrestling?

VON ERICH: I've really had enough.

PWI: Is there anything you'd like to say to the readers?

VON ERICH: I'd like to say to everybody that we love you all and this is the truth. This is the way it went. My father was not a real brutal guy like they try to play him out to be in some of these gossip magazines. We were just a lot of fun-loving little boys.

PWI: You mentioned your father in a defensive way. I'm sure you've heard most of the rumors concerning your family.

VON ERICH: Sure, I've heard a lot of them.

Kevin had a solid career, but has no plans to compete again. He is writing a screenplay about the real story of his ill-fated brothers.

press conference

The popularity of Texas wrestling, and the Von Erichs in particular, diminished through the '80s as the "First Family Of Wrestling" was stricken with tragedy after tragedy.

PWI: Well, how about commenting on a few of them?

VON ERICH: Go ahead. That's what I'm here for.

PWI: It has been suggested that drug use was prevalent in your family and your parents didn't discourage it. In fact, some people say your mother encouraged it.

VON ERICH: I'll say this, as far as illegal drugs, that's not true. I'm talking about drugs prescribed by doctors. Painkillers. Dave and Mike had surgeries. All the brothers had painkillers prescribed by doctors. Kerry was the only one who ever got into illegal drugs, not prescribed by doctors. The best way to handle pain is to grit your teeth and put ice on it. If you take a pain pill, the next time it will take two of them and the next time it's going to be three. It's just a crack in the door which gets wider and wider. In a way, drugs had a lot to do with the deaths of quite a few of my brothers. Mike was into painkillers. It's nasty to talk about. I know kids are reading these articles. I don't want to get into it too much, but drugs are deadly. I can tell you from experience, some of my brothers died from legal drugs.

PWI: Many people accuse your parents, especially your father, of being abusive.

VON ERICH: I was there. I remember back when my dad was a bad guy in wrestling. My brothers and I would go to school and the bigger kids would watch wrestling on Saturday night and get even on Monday. We fought together and the family who fights together not only gets good at fighting, it gets real close. I don't remember my parents being really super strict or abusive in any way at all. I remember a real happy childhood full of running in the Texas sun, just us and nature. We didn't even wear clothes until we went to school. We were so far out in the country. We didn't even have any school chums. (Pauses) I do feel lonely.

PWI: Some people say you and your brothers were pushed into wrestling.

VON ERICH: I've heard that rumor a million times. People love to talk about that one. My dad did not push my brothers into wrestling.

PWI: Do your parents blame themselves for what happened?

VON ERICH: My mother says she doesn't blame my dad, but I don't know. She doesn't blame herself. My father doesn't blame my mother and he doesn't blame himself. They know how wild we were.

PWI: But you're pretty convinced you're going to make it, aren't you?

VON ERICH: I have beautiful children and a beautiful wife. A nice home. I don't live in opulent luxurious surroundings, but I have everything I want. I live in the country, I have room to move around, shoot my guns, and be by myself. I have all I need. My little brother [Kerry] figured he didn't have anything. He was rootless. He had no home. Seeing me with my family made his pain greater. It reminded him of what he was missing. It was such a sad, tragic thing. □

Jerry Sags and Brian Knobs, if not more so. And I must take issue with what Knobs said about wanting to be called "Beauty And The Beasts." That title, whether people agree with me or not, is reserved for Sunshine with any combination of wrestlers.

I simply cannot fathom the idea of Missy as a manager. She is just a no-talent bimbo who is involved in wrestling only for monetary reasons. And by the way, Missy, who says you have any brains or beauty?

DOWN ON THE OFFICIATING

Never have I seen poorer officiating than in Big Van Vader's title match against Ric Flair at Clash of the Champions XXV. Referee Randy Anderson should have had the intelligence not to count a pinfall at all if he was planning to disqualify the man being pinned. Flair was cheated out of the title. I thought the WWF had poor officiating, but this takes the cake.

Now Vader thinks he is still WCW World champion. Sure, he may hold the title, but we all know the real World champion is the "Nature Boy." An incompetent referee proved that. So, like everyone promises, Ric Flair will have yet another day. Maybe one day Vader will walk that aisle and realize being "the man" and staying "the man" are two different things. I just hope WCW picks a competent referee for the rematch.

CHANGEABLE USWA

I've absolutely had it with two of the USWA's so-called top stars, Jeff Jarrett and Brian Christopher. Every time I turn around, it seems like one of them has changed his attitude and style. Christopher used to be one of the whiniest, most despicable men in the USWA; now the fans love him almost as much as Jerry Lawler himself.

And Jarrett was once the clean-cut, gracious Southern gentleman who played by the rules. Now he's turned his back on Christopher and is a spiteful rulebreaker. Worse yet, it seems like Jarrett is now joining with Toni Adams, who was once Christopher's favorite woman. Say what you will about Adams—at least she's a consistent rulebreaker.

TED ARNESS

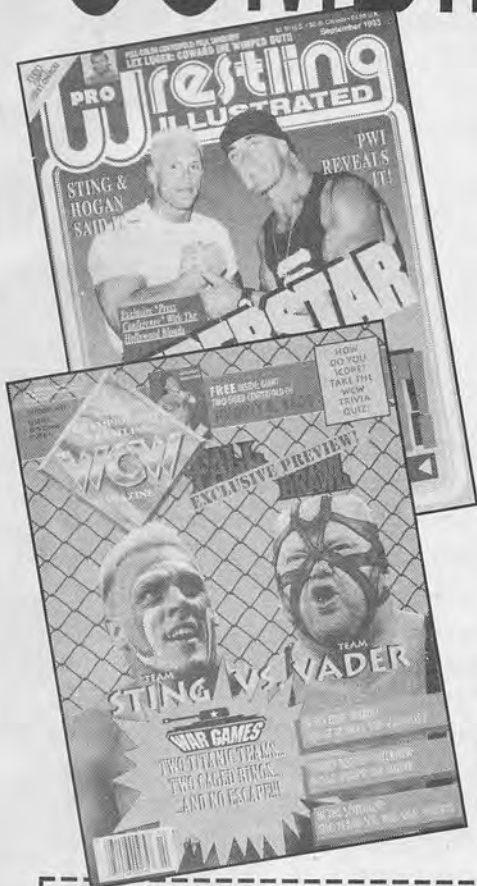

Lexington, KY □

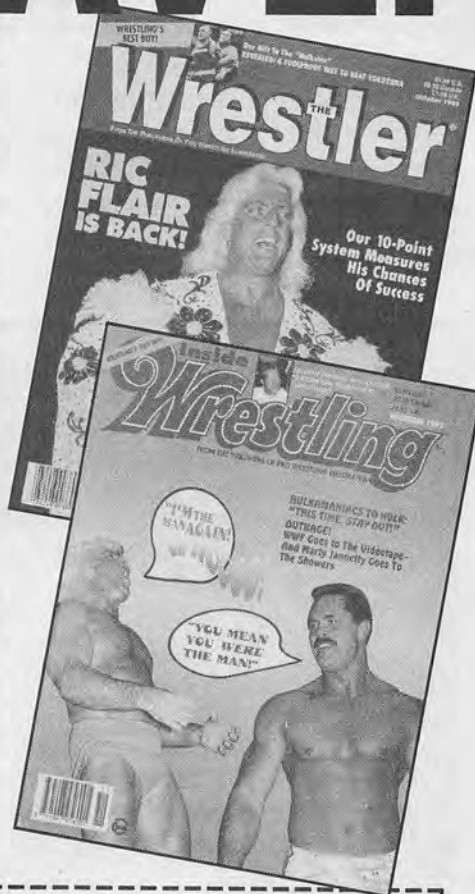

Jeff Jarrett has turned into a rulebreaker, much to the dismay of "Hotline" caller Ted Arness. Ted is equally irritated at Brian Christopher's conversion to fan favorite.

both matches, but Race won respect ... and perhaps some tips for Vader on how to take on the "Nature Boy."

"If I'd had more time to prepare, I'm certain I would have won," Race said of his matches. "I think I learned a thing or two to help Vader beat Flair. But what Flair needs to learn to beat Vader would fill an encyclopedia—and it hasn't been written."

Tex Slazenger and Shanghai Pierce, who always put up a strong fight but rarely beat the top tag teams, faced each other recently at Battlebowl in Pensacola, Florida. The "Lethal Lottery" teamed Pierce with

Rick Rude, and they defeated Slazenger and Marcus Alexander Bagwell. Poor Tex! He can't beat Bagwell as an opponent, and now he couldn't win with him as a teammate.

Slazenger and Pierce even brawled briefly during the Battlebowl match, but made up and pummeled the helpless Bagwell afterward.

Incidentally, Vader ended up winning the Battlebowl battle royal, last eliminating Sting.

When Missy Hyatt became manager of The Nasty Boys, critics called the move all show and said she couldn't contribute anything to them. Whether or not that's the case, let the record show that Hyatt and the Nastys have dominated WCW tag team wrestling for months, save for a 20-day reign by Bagwell and 2 Cold Scorpio. The lady must be doing something right.

By the time you read this, we'll know whether Jim Cornette will have to call me for advice on living boldly, er, baldly. At Smoky Mountain's "Christmas Chaos" in Knoxville, Tennessee, Dick Murdoch is coming in to battle The Bullet. Cornette initially believed the match would be Bullet's mask (he believes former SMW Commissioner Bob Armstrong is under the disguise) against $5,000. Instead, he was furious to discover his own hair is on the line. Just picture Jimbo as a chrome dome! He might need bandages to cover up the shine.

And he could get those bandages from Prince Kharis, a colossal Egyptian mummy managed by Daryl Van Horne.

Veteran Dick Murdoch is visiting Smoky Mountain to challenge the mysterious "Bullet." Jim Cornette, who brought him in, could lose his hair if Murdoch loses the match!

Kharis, who recently surprised Tim Horner in a series of matches, claims to be 300,000 years old. Compared to him, Mongolian Stomper is a pup.

Two significant things are happening in the USWA. First, the long-despised Brian Christopher is turning into a fan favorite, so much that he has sacrificed having Toni Adams as an ally (and that's some sacrifice!). Adams is now in the camp of Rex Hargrove. Meanwhile, Jeff Jarrett is turning rulebreaker and is spending more time in the WWF, ostensibly to help his music career in Nashville. (Memo to Jeff: We also put out a magazine called CountryBeat. Next time you perform in one of those clubs at Printers' Alley, let us know. We'll send a photographer.)

That's all for now. See you at ringside! □

Jeff Jarrett has finally debuted in the WWF and is now wrestling as a rulebreaker. He seems to believe he can use the WWF as a steppingstone to a successful country music career.

after Bret. He is widely respected for his technical and aerial abilities. He is a stellar tag team wrestler.

Then what is eating Owen? The rivalry. Bret's been both World and Intercontinental champion. Owen's most prestigious solo belt came in 1993, when he briefly reigned atop the USWA.

"Owen wants desperately to be WWF World champion someday," said one former tag partner. "But right now, all he sees is Bret getting all the opportunities. It's easy to say to Owen, 'Hey, be patient. You'll get your chance,' but he's a very impatient guy. He feels he's been around the WWF long enough, and that now is his time."

Now is the time for Bret, not for Owen. Bret is fully prepared to make a dedicated run at Yokozuna, to whom he lost the title at WrestleMania IX. Bret is finished with "The King" Jerry Lawler; now he wants the kingdom. Owen probably understands that, but he won't accept it.

Many Hart followers say it's possible that Bret and Owen may end up opposing each other in the ring to, among other things, decide who is more worthy of a World title shot.

"On the face of it, it sounds ridiculous," said one friend. "Everyone knows that Bret is more deserving. But, because of the family bond, Bret may feel the need to prove that to Owen directly. Whether they do it in front of 100 or 1,000 or 100,000 people won't matter to them. If it has to be settled that way, it will be. Bret wasn't afraid to take on his brother-in-law

"Owen may fly off the handle, but a match with Bret is the last thing he wants," said one wrestler who competed against Owen and Bruce in the Stampede federation. "None of those brothers want to wrestle each other. Even if Bret were World champion, Owen wouldn't take him on. He'd wait till somebody else had the title. They may have their dust-ups now and then, but my hunch is that two Hart brothers wouldn't be so willing to fight."

It's hard to believe that last quote. If Bret regains the title, Owen definitely would not pass up a shot at the belt. He's too much of a competitor. He's risked family unity already; he'd gladly do it again.

What happened between Owen and his brothers at Survivor Series may easily happen again. The Harts are the First Family not because they're nice guys, which they are, but because they're winners. They enjoy winning so much they willingly push each other aside in pursuit of their goals.

So the more acclaim they win jointly as a family, the greater the threat to family unity. And if they are less together as a family, they all suffer.

For Bret, Owen, and the rest of the Harts, it is time to redefine success. □

There's always a natural rivalry among family members, but it needs to be set aside at certain times. Like it or not, this is a lesson Owen Hart must learn or he might risk tearing apart his clan.

Davey Boy Smith, and he won't be afraid to take it one step further."

Others will argue forcefully that, despite any potential problems between them, Bret and Owen would never face off so dramatically.

Tatanka sets up Ludvig Borga for a right cross in a thriller. In the heat of the action, the steroid scandal was the farthest thing from people's minds. No one can ever destroy the essential beauty of fierce athletic competition.

Then the matches began and there was Diesel squaring off against Razor Ramon. Diesel's eyes aflame, Razor's taut body a ready coil. I thought of Razor's story and of how far he's come to be where he is—the dedication of a wrestler paying off.

That's not all I saw that night. I watched Ludvig Borga take on Tatanka. And then I had the thrill of seeing two of the best wrestlers alive, Bret Hart and Yokozuna, go head to head. I listened to the grunts and shouts of men fighting for their honor with all they had.

And all around me, as the great wrestling unfolded, I could feel the spine-tingling roar of the crowd.

For several hours the entire arena got lost in the world of wrestling, absorbed by athletes putting themselves—every ounce of blood, every drop of sweat—on the line.

Those are the athletes who make wrestling the unparalleled sport that it is. They, above all else, are the reasons wrestling will continue to thrive no matter what befalls it.

In editing Chris Bernucca's col-

The crowd at the Mid-Hudson Civic Center in Poughkeepsie is wild with anticipation as The Kid prepares to spring from the ropes at Shawn Michaels, who had run in to interfere in the match between Razor Ramon and Diesel.

umn this issue, a piece where he all but condemns the future of wrestling, I felt a real disturbance welling within me. I just can't subscribe to the things he said.

My answer to you, Chris, as you call out for "drastic change," is to let wrestling be and it will be great. Wrestling in this country is alive and well. I saw it with my own eyes. I heard it with my own ears.

Yes, Vincent McMahon has been a vital figure in the recent history of wrestling—perhaps the most vital figure aside from Hulk Hogan—and if he is found guilty everyone in wrestling will feel residue pain.

But wrestling has been carrying on, thrilling the great people of this country and abroad, for more than a hundred years. Don't expect it to stop now, whatever the verdict on McMahon, whatever the glitches in the game.

Major League Baseball took a beating last spring. Virtually every major medium, from the New York Times to Sports Illustrated, took the sport to task for its high salaries and alleged decline in quality of play. But when it came to that fabulous weekend in October, the Atlanta Braves and the San Francisco Giants played baseball down to the wire, winning game after game to keep themselves in the race for the National League West title. We saw Barry Bonds and David Justice, and baseball was roaring.

The game kept right on roaring with Lenny Dykstra and the rest of the tobacco-spittin' Phillies taking hold of America. And when Joe Carter's home run capped the Blue Jays' series-winning rally, no one was complaining anymore.

So say what you will about the demise of wrestling. Point to the troubles and issue a victorious "A-ha!" Tell the world things will never be the same.

I, for one, ain't buyin' it. I say wrestling is very much alive.

Just listen to it roar. □

Michaels struggled early in his match with Kid. It might have been lingering effects from the Survivor Series several days before, when Michaels pinch-hit for Jerry Lawler and led the Three Knights against the Hart family.

While Kid may be a talented wrestler with amazing aerial skills, Michaels isn't interested in facing him again. He believes he's fully recovered from his layoff, and is ready to retake his belt from Ramon.

U.S. title when a herniated disk prevented him from defending the belt. Instead of taking out his frustration on WCW Vice President of Wrestling Operations Bill Watts—the man who stripped him of the title—Rude channeled his energies in a more productive manner by coming back and challenging new champion Dustin Rhodes.

Like Rude, Michaels knows he gains nothing by bothering with the federation head. Tunney doesn't have the belt; Ramon does. The only way that can change is by him beating Ramon.

If all this seems too obvious, consider how Jim Cornette often worries too much about commissioners (such as former SMW head Bob Armstrong) and Eddie Gilbert caused troubles for both his father, referee Tommy Gilbert, and Watts in the old UWF.

Michaels' path back to Ramon was temporarily detoured when he returned to the ring in mid-November and took Jerry Lawler's place in the Survivor Series. Michaels did it out of duty; he hates the Harts, too. But it was definitely an annoyance. He planned on getting out of the Survivor Series with his body and pride intact. He got one of the two.

Michaels quickly got over that loss and moved on to Kid. All the while, his sights were set on the bigger picture. The big belt. The big man.

A 1994 Feud of the Year candidate is rushing through the developmental stages. This one might still be going on when 1995 arrives. □

Kids, and Harts of the world.

That's not a knock against Bret Hart. No way. Hart, the former World and I-C champion, is more than a match for Michaels. He proved it at the Survivor Series, when Michaels was left alone ignore and hightailed it back to the dressing room. But let's examine Michaels' reasons for running when instincts told him to stay and fight against three Harts.

Michaels was stripped of the I-C title in late September after failing to meet unspecified contractual obligations. The incensed Michaels was beyond angry when WWF President Jack Tunney suspended him indefinitely.

That opened the door for Ramon to become I-C champ.

He and Rick Martel won a battle royal to decide the top two contenders, then won the belt with a victory over "The Model" on September 27 in New Haven, Connecticut.

Although Michaels was out of the picture while Ramon climbed to glory, he quietly seethed on the sidelines. Sources close to Michaels say he immediately blamed Ramon for his misfortune and suspected Ramon of conspiring with Tunney.

The situation is similar to what happened in WCW last year. Rick Rude was stripped of the # time capsules

"MOM ALWAYS LIKED YOU BEST!" "NO, YOU!" "NO, YOU!" "NO, YOU!"

"I WAS FLYING LONG BEFORE MADUSA WAS EVEN BORN!"

June Byers was one of the great women wrestlers in history, but didn't limit her accomplishments to the ring. She and husband Sam Menacker owned a Cessna aircraft, and Byers is at the controls at a Houston airport in 1963. It made it a lot easier to reach faraway cards!

HE WOULD'VE TAKEN THEM TO THE OPERA HOUSE, BUT IT HADN'T BEEN BUILT YET

When the Zebra Kid traveled to Sydney, Australia, in 1962, he visited a local gymnasium and showed off his strength by hoisting three of its workers on a barbell—combined weight, 740 pounds. A huge international star during the 1960s, Zebra Kid was never unmasked in the ring.

"BE PATIENT, HONEY, IT'S NOT QUITE READY"

It's a Sunday morning, January, 1965. Wrestler Tokyo Tom, eagerly awaiting that afternoon's dinner, gives some instructions to wife Linell, who is preparing the pot roast. Since there's cake on the table, they're probably expecting some guests. Come and get it!

Every other month, Pro Wrestling Illustrated will pore through its massive photo collection to bring you some of the most unique photographs the mat world has ever seen!

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE VERSION OF "YOU KEEP ME HANGIN' ON"? THE SUPREMES, VANILLA FUDGE, OR KIM WILDE?

J.J. Dillon finds himself in a precarious situation. Does he leap off the fence, where he probably will be pummeled by Dusty Rhodes? Or does he climb inside the ring, into the midst of a steel cage match? It's a terrible predicament during this August 1982 match in Orlando, Florida.

YOU'RE GOING TO THE MR. CLEAN COMMERCIAL AUDITIONS, LIKE IT OR NOT

Waldo Van Erich has just lost to Dory Dixon, and is getting his hair shaved on this May 1962 card in Houston. Perhaps he prefers the more conventional atmosphere of his local barber shop. If they had stopped at this point, Von Erich might have been the '60s equivalent of Luna Vachon!

PREMATCH PREPARATION—NOTHING LIKE IT!

Ken Dillinger was a detested Chicago wrestler about 20 years ago, regularly challenging the likes of then-popular Don Muraco. He and girlfriend Momma Dillinger relax behind an arena in November of 1971, quaffing a couple of beers. We hope they brought those bottles back for deposit.

ALI VS. INOKI MADE A LOAD OF MONEY. WE CAN, TOO

Actually, John Powers wondered what it might be like to incorporate some martial arts techniques into his repertoire. So on a trip to Greensboro, North Carolina, in 1979, he stopped by to learn some tricks of the trade from George Ferrell. Hope it did him some good on his next tour of Japan.

CUMULATIVE RATINGS

These ratings are based on the past 10 issues of this magazine. We have examined our ratings for each of these issues in our Top 10 and Tag Team categories only, and assigned each position a point value: 10 points for a first-place rating, nine for second place, and so on. The point values for all wrestlers in the past 10 issues have been compiled, with a possible maximum of 100 points. Each issue we'll present the top five finishers in each category. While our regular ratings reflect the past month, these cumulative ratings give an indication of wider trends in the sport.

RATINGS ANALYSIS

Every month, this column will tell fans how we go about rating over 200 wrestlers in 20 different categories. It is a behind-the-scenes look at the most important—and respected—ratings system in the sport. This column is vital reading for all wrestling fans.

Returning to the fold. November was a rough month for some of the WWF's top competitors. In the days leading up to the Survivor Series, both Tatanka and Quebecer Pierre were relegated to the injured list and had to be replaced in that pay-per-view event.

The Native American's injury came at the hands of Finland's favorite son, Ludvig Borga, who ruthlessly attacked and defeated him at a TV taping. Pierre's injury was inflicted by America's number-one flagwaver, Lex Luger himself. His Lex-cellence clobbered the tag team beltholder with his steel-plated forearm on a WWF Monday Night Raw match in mid-November.

Many readers implored us to move The Quebecers, though they are still World champs, way down in the tag ranks and to push Tatanka out of the WWF ratings altogether. We did just that in the latter case the last few issues, but grudgingly kept Jacques and Pierre in the ratings since manager Johnny Polo subbed for Pierre on several cards.

Since December rolled around, both men have returned to action. And Tatanka has picked up right where he left off before suffering his first WWF loss to Borga. He dominated the intimidating Diesel in a series of bouts overseas.

More importantly, he defeated Borga by disqualification in a rematch held on Raw. WWF World champ Yokozuna interfered on the Finn's behalf. Thus, Tatanka's recent hot streak has more than earned him one of the top spots in the WWF rankings.

Curt Hennig

"Perfect" absence. Where's Curt Hennig, a lot of you have asked us. What's happened to "Mr. Perfect"? Unfortunately, we don't have a real good answer for you. Sources close to Hennig will only say that he is taking care of some personal business right now and was happy to give "Macho Man" Randy Savage the chance to take his place at the Survivor Series.

Rumors persist that he's considering jumping to another federation, but as of this writing, they were just that: rumors. Nonetheless, he'll be AWOL from our ratings until he turns up in a wrestling ring again somewhere.

"The King" goes Smoky? By now you must have heard about Jerry Lawler's legal problems in Louisville, Kentucky. You probably also know that Lawler has been kept off all WWF cards and telecasts while he tries to clear his name, though he's still competing in his beloved USWA.

A strange thing happened on a recent card at Memphis' Mid-South Coliseum. Smoky Mountain champion Brian Lee showed up (without Tammy Fytch at his side) and put his title on the line against "The King." Lawler had the hometown crowd decidedly on his side and seemed close to winning the title before Rex Hargrove and Reggie B. Fine stormed the ring to rescue "Prime Time."

After careful consideration, we opted to put Lawler in the

Jeff Jarrett

SMW ratings in PWI Weekly for the week he received the title shot, but decided to leave him out of the monthly rankings until we see him compete on a regular basis there.

If that ever happened, the big question would be whether he'd do it as a fan favorite or rulebreaker. We may never find out.

And speaking of the USWA's best ... Our suspicions about Jeff Jarrett were not unfounded. He's becoming a rulebreaker. He recently won the USWA title by pinning Lawler with his feet on the ropes. He also abandoned Brian Christopher while they were USWA tag champs, leaving him to be viciously double-teamed by PG-13. Jarrett also finally debuted in the WWF, using his arrogant "Double J" country music star persona.

He's truly earned his spot on our Most Hated list.

Is there anything we didn't cover? Do you have any additional thoughts on our ratings? If so, write to: "Ratings Analysis," c/o PRO WRESTLING ILLUSTRATED, Box 956, Fort Washington, PA 19034. □

BOBBY HEENAN OUSTED FROM WWF, VOWS NOT TO RETURN!

Feud With Gorilla Monsoon Comes To A Head

By ANDY RODRIGUEZ

WHITE PLAINS, NY—After 9½ years with the WWF, Bobby Heenan is out. His long-running feud with fellow broadcaster Gorilla Monsoon played itself out during a taping of WWF Monday Night Raw. Monsoon approached "The Brain" at the broadcasting table and told him he had both good news and bad news for him.

The good news was that the WWF was sending Heenan on a trip; the bad news was that it was only a one-way trek ... straight out of the federation. Monsoon had previously threatened to teach the man fans call "Weasel" a lesson.

"I don't need the WWF," he told Wrestling Enquirer

The feud between WWF analysts Bobby Heenan and Gorilla Monsoon has led to Heenan's departure. Monsoon sent "The Brain" on a "one-way trip ... straight out of the federation" during a recent taping of WWF Monday Night Raw.

in a brief telephone interview from his Beverly Hills, California, home. "They always favored Monsoon anyway."

It is unclear where Heenan will turn up next. After a mediocre wrestling career, Heenan made a name for himself during the 1980s as a manager in both the AWA and the WWF. He led Nick Bockwinkel to the AWA World title and also had the likes of King Kong Bundy, Big John Studd, Andre the Giant, Lex Luger, "Mr. Perfect" Curt Hennig, and Ric Flair in his stable at various times.

"Mr. Heenan is clearly the most knowledgeable person in wrestling today," said Edward J. Windel, Heenan's director of public relations. "He could manage again, but will probably pursue something in the broadcasting or journalism field, perhaps even take David Letterman's job. The possibilities now that he's no longer obligated to the WWF are endless."

SMW Champ Lee Challenges Lawler

"Prime Time" was booed loudly by the pro-Lawler crowd, but wrestled well against "The King." In a surprising move, Lee competed against Lawler without the support of his beautiful but cunning manager, Tammy Fyich. His critics are quick to point out that he relies on Fyich's interference to keep his belt. The match, however, did not end without interference. Lee was disqualified when Rex Hargrove and Reggie B. Fine entered the ring to offer help.

"People say Tammy has to interfere for me to keep this title," Lee said afterward. "Tammy's the best manager in the world, but I do the wrestling. I assured her I could take care of business against Lawler. She agreed."

It was not known at press time if Lee would appear on future USWA cards.

Koloff, Valiant Renew Old Rivalry

By CHRIS BERNUCCA

SMITHFIELD, NC—One day after Carolina Championship Wrestling Alliance held a ceremony to induct the late Jay Youngblood into its Hall of Fame, two old veterans, Jimmy Valiant and Ivan Koloff, were talking about settling an old feud once and for all.

Koloff had just lost a Russian chain match to CCWA champion Kahn the Warlord by disqualification when a brawl between him and the slimmed-down "Boogie-Woogie Man" erupted.

It was in stark contrast to events at the Hall of Fame banquet held the night before. Rick Steamboat, once a partner of Youngblood's, inducted him, giving a moving speech. Both Koloff and Valiant appeared at the banquet as well, but the mood turned much darker at the following night's card.

"Koloff's been doin' nasty things in this sport for too long," said Valiant. "It's up to me to get rid of him for good."

Koloff and Valiant are expected to meet in a specialty match in the near future.

Roma's Horseman Future In Doubt

By CRAIG PETERS

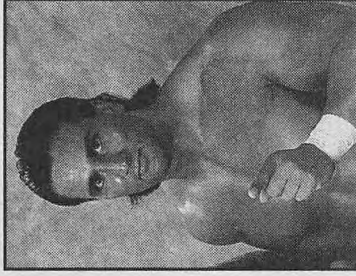

ATLANTA—The Four Horsemen have taken a lot of heat from people who insisted there were only three active members; that number may be reduced to two, as Paul Roma has apparently decided to become a rulebreaker.

It happened at a WCW TV taping at Center Stage

Theater during a match pitting Roma and Erik Watts against Lord Steven Regal and Paul Orndorff. Regal was assisted by Sir William, while Orndorff was seconded by The Assassin.

Following a signal from Assassin, Roma turned on his unsuspecting partner and attacked him. The match was declared a no-contest. Roma, who won the WCW World tag team title with fellow Horseman Arn Anderson this summer, offered no apologies for his actions.

"Winning the tag team belts with Arn was just a taste of glory as far as I'm concerned," he said. "I'm capable of bigger and better things. But as long as I have to take a backseat to people like Ric Flair, I'm not going to realize that potential. Let's face it: I was by far the most talented Horseman."

Paul Roma's days as a member of The Four Horsemen are all but over, as he now teams with rulebreaker Paul Orndorff.

AROUND THE GLOBE

CARDIFF, WALES

Tatanka may have been on the sidelines for quite a few weeks following a savage beating he took from Ludvig Borga, but he's back and already in top form. He handily defeated Diesel on several stops of the WWF's European tour. He's no longer undefeated, but is just as talented as ever. Now rumor has it that this Native American is set for an all-out assault on either the WWF World or Intercontinental title.

CLOVERDALE, B.C.

A scary incident took place on a recent West Coast Championship Wrestling card. Heavyweight champ "Gorgeous" Michelle Starr, in the middle of a defense against rival Billy Two Eagles, was flipped out of the ring between the ropes and landed face-first. He broke several toes and severely strained his neck. Doctors say Starr is lucky he wasn't paralyzed.

TOKYO, JAPAN

Big Van Vader had a tough time in the Orient. The man who loves to cripple opponents, the same man some observers have labeled the toughest, most ruthless competitor in wrestling, submitted to Nobuhiko Takada's painful armlock submission hold after sustaining an injury to his right arm. Good thing for Vader his WCW World title wasn't on the line.

HOT SHOT

Fans at a recent ECW card saw Rocco Rock of Public Enemy not only wrestle, but show off his gymnastic skills. Rock, captured photographically in the middle of a moonsault, appears to be balancing himself on one arm above a prone Jason Knight on the way to Public Enemy's win against Knight and Ian Rotten. A little more practice, and who knows: Rock might find himself on the U.S. Olympic men's gymnastic team come 1996!
